Luther Protest Brings Apology

Says Best Interests of Both Nations Demand Truce.

By William V. Nessly.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull last night expressed hope that the bitter controversy between Germans and Americans will be ended.

The Secretary took this action after apologizing again to the German government for new remarks made by Mayor Fiorella LaGuardia of New York regarding Chancellor Hitler of Germany. The official expression of regrets followed presentation by Ambassador Hans Luther of a protest against criticism leveled at Hitler by LaGuardia at an anti-Nazi mass meeting in New York Monday night.

In announcing the reply to the German protest Secretary Hull said:

"I am personally hopeful that all who are participating in the present controversy, which is marked by bitter and vituperative utterances in this country and in Germany, may soon reach the conclusion that it would be to the best interests of both countries for them to find other subjects which can be discussed more temperately."

Luther Perturbed.

Meanwhile, Berlin dispatches of the Associated Press indicated a desire there to end the "transatlantic battle of epithets." United States Ambassador William E. Dodd will talk over the entire situation with Foreign Minister von Neurath, at the latter's invitation.

Ambassador Luther, visibly perturbed, was accompanied to the State Department yesterday by the counselor of the German Embassy, Dr. Hans Thomsen. He declined to discuss the situation with newspapermen either before or after his conference with Hull, which lasted almost an hour. He was understood to have told the Secretary continuation of the attacks by LaGuardia might put a severe strain on relations between the two countries.

Hull replied that his response to a similar protest by the German Ambassador on March 5 was equally applicable in the new instance, and added that in view of the limitation upon the power of the United States Government with respect to freedom of speech, "nothing can be profitably added to what has already been said."

Expresses Regret.

The Secretary's reply to the March 5 protest said:

"In this country the right of freedom of speech is guaranteed by the Constitution to every citizen and is cherished as a part of the national heritage. This, however, does not lessen the regret of the Government when utterances either by private citizens or by public officials speaking in an individual capacity give offense to a government with which we have official relations. I very earnestly deprecate the utterances which have thus given offense to the German government. They do not represent the attitude of this Government toward the German government. It is our policy to conduct the official relations with other nations upon a basis of complete and mutual respect for the rights and sensibilities of each other."

The German ambassador was understood to have protested, in yesterday's conversations, against LaGuardia's use of a German phrase, in speaking of Hitler, which expresses, in the German mind, the limit of opprobrium. The phrase was "nicht satisfaktionsfaehig," which would imply the person referred to is "so devoid of honor that gentlemen would not challenge him to a duel."

LaGuardia was not the only speaker at the Monday mass meeting to attack the Nazis. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former NRA head, declared "Adolf Hitler and his immediate staff of 'Nazipathetics' have become a sort of monster, threatening the peace of the world."

John L. Lewis, labor chieftain and head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, told the crowd in Madison Square Garden

Flier Takes Off From Oakland in Wake of Two Huge Pan-American Planes; Honolulu First Stop on 27,000-Mile Globe-Circling Hop.

By the Associated Press.

Oakland, Calif., March 17.—A new American conquest of the air began today with Amelia Earhart launching her 27,000-mile world flight in the wake of two huge clipper planes speeding toward the Orient and the South Seas.

Miss Earhart's $80,000 "flying laboratory" left the field at 4:36 p. m. (P. S. T.) and swung toward Honolulu behind the Pan American Clipper and the Hawaii Clipper, which had preceded her by only a short time.

Miss Earhart had covered approximately 365 miles in the first two and one-half hours, a radio message received here said.

The Pan-American clipper radioed her speedier land ship overtook the seaplane at 5:40 p. m.

In spite of the disinclination of the 25 persons involved to call it a race, the three planes were speeding relatively close together.

As sunshine broke through the clouds the 26-ton Clipper led the take-offs, leaving for Honolulu and Manila with seven passengers, one of them a woman, and a crew of eight.

The 25-ton Pan American Clipper, on a 7,000-mile pioneering jaunt to New Zealand, followed.

Miss Earhart said good-by to her husband in a Navy hangar and with a smile at the small crowd of spectators raced to the waiting plane. Its crew of three men were already aboard.

Italians Defy Spanish Pact, Britain Hears

Inquiry Ordered After Report Rome Has Sent More Troops.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 17.—Efforts of 27 European nations to isolate the Spanish civil war appeared in jeopardy tonight as Great Britain moved to investigate reports that Italy had permitted "volunteers" to land in Spain.

The government directed its ambassador at Rome to make "urgent inquiries" into official reports of violation of the non-intervention agreement.

Twenty-seven nations joined in an agreement, effective at midnight, February 20, to halt the flow of arms and volunteers to Spain.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden told Commons he had received a report that an "undetermined number" of Italian troops landed at Cadiz on March 5 from an Italian ship.

The government revealed also that the Spanish government at Valencia had proposed to give both Great Britain and France 'concessions" in Spanish Morocco—now held by the insurgents—in return for aid in the civil war.

Official quarters said the "very nature of the proposals made it impossible to consider them since it would be a direct departure from the declared policy of non-intervention in Spain.

The Labor Party's "doubt and misgivings" about the Spanish control plan were expressed by Noel Baker in Commons after the Spanish ambassador to London protested to Eden that two German ships alleged-

Ruhland Urges Pre-Marriage Medical Tests

Physical examination of all prospective brides and bridegrooms was emphatically urged last night by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, as one step toward reducing the venereal disease toll, checking its spread and safeguarding the health of the unborn.

Addressing the joint meeting of the Medical Society and the Social Hygiene Society, which was open to the public, Dr. Ruhland cited the Capital's high syphilis and gonorrhea rates in his argument for certification of couples by their physician and routine blood tests of all maternity cases.

A capacity crowd of more than 500 attended the meeting, held in the Medical Society's auditorium at 1718 M street northwest. The other speakers were Representative Joseph L. Pfeifer, a surgeon, of New York; Drs. William H. Hough, Harry A. Fowler and George W. Creswell, and Ray H. Everett, executive secretary of the Social Hygiene Society.

Cites Army Standards.

"If the Army thinks it worthwhile to get men physically fit and railway companies make sure of not employing a liability and if business and other groups insist on physical fitness," said Dr. Ruhland, "then certainly for the marriage contract, the most important of all, there should be guarantee of physical fitness also, or at least freedom from infection.

"This should be not only because of the damage that may be done by either of the contracting parties but

Plan to Tax U.S. Property Under Fire

McAneny Changes His Estimate of $5,500,000 as Excessive.

By James D. Secrest.

The District could expect to collect only about $600,000 annually in taxes on the Federal Government's property in the city, according to a valuation of the holdings made by J. L. Jacobs, Chicago efficiency expert, yesterday as he testified before the opening sessions of a fiscal relations inquiry launched by two sub-committees of the House District Committee.

At the sessions, the status of Federal property immediately became the focal point of the fiscal relations controversy. Jacobs' testimony was the first public explanation of the position of the President's Advisory Committee, of which he is a member, that Federal property should not be taxed and that if taxed on a proper assessment base it would produce only $600,000 a year.

After George McAneny, chairman of the President's Advisory Committee, had analyzed the District tax assessor's estimate of Federal property aggregating $648,000,000 in the Capital, Jacobs assailed the figure as excessive on the ground that it represented actual cost of construction.

A true valuation for taxation purposes, he said, would eliminate the "monumental costs" of most of the new Federal buildings, such as those in the Federal Triangle. It would not include, moreover, the city's vast park areas, the Washington Monument, the Lincoln Memorial, and other non-business property.

Tax Estimate Changed.

As a result, according to his analysis, the District could not expect to collect more than $600,000, although District officials have frequently stated that a $1.50 tax on Federal holdings would produce approximately $12,000,000.

McAneny had previously estimated that a tax on Federal property, as figured by the assessor, would produce, $5,500,000 even after the park areas are eliminated.

This estimate was based on a valuation of $385,000,000, reached after $263,000,000 had been deducted for park reservations.

Representative Sacks (Democrat), Pennsylvania, attacked this deduction on the ground that Washington, left to its own devices, would not set aside large tracks for park purposes. He also disagreed sharply with Jacobs on his method of slashing Federal property assessments, asserting that the land used for commercial pursuits would produce much more revenue than allowed by Jacobs.

McAneny sought to belittle the amount of Federal tax-exempt property in the District by stating that New York City has $210,000,000 worth of non-taxable United States property about which one hears no complaint.

Representative Nichols, (Democrat), Oklahoma, pounced on this statement, however, by asking how this compared in proportion to New York City's taxable property. McAneny said that it represents about 12 per cent. The District tax assessor contends that Federal property in Washington is about 50 per cent of the taxable base.

It was then that Jacobs intervened with his new calculation and concluded with the statement that actual Federal property that might be properly labeled tax-emempt in the District amounts to only 15 per cent.

Resume Hearing Today.

The inquiry, which will be resumed at 10:30 o'clock this morning, was conducted under the direction of Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, chairman of the sub-committee charged with the task of passing on tax proposals for the District.

Committee members displayed considerable interest in the new tax measures recommended by the committee and the plan for reimbursement fo rcontractual services performed by the Federal and District governments for each other.

They indicated, however, skepticism regarding the allowances made by the Jacobs investigators and one member stated that District department heads will be called on to explain their widely different calculations that the District performs annually $12,000,000 worth of services for the Federal Government.

Both McAneny and Jacobs ex-

20,000 in Tumult as Strikers Defy Court Order in Detroit; 3 Senators Assail Sit-Downs

Dictatorship Is Threat, Say King, Johnson and Lewis.

Congress Helpless Robinson Asserts

By Sidney Olson.

Three Senators yesterday saw the specter of "dictatorship" in the American future if the current wave of sit-down strikes is allowed to continue without Government intervention.

Aroused by the three assaults on Administration inactivity, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, the majority leader, dictated a statement to newspapermen which confessed inability of "Congress or other Federal authority" to meet the situation, adding:

"Until the Supreme Court has passed upon the validity of the statute referred to (the Wagner Labor Relations Board) it is exceedingly difficult to make advancement."

Strikes Called Illegal.

The three who blasted sit-down tactics not only as "lawless" and "communistic," but as a symbol of "the tyrants who shall take charge of our Government" in the future, were Senators William H. King, of Utah; J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, both Democrats, and Hiram Johnson, of California, Republican.

Lewis, in asking intervention by President Roosevelt to halt sit-down strikes, said:

"The time has come, as I behold it, when our honorable President would be justified upon any action taken by this honorable body in suggesting to behold the situation as its right, not from the standpoint of the Constitution or the line of demarcation between the Federal Government and the States, those abstract doctrines which have oftentimes wooed us to confusion, but because the right of peace, the security of honest property, the preservation of the Federal Government, calls at times for action on the part of men of will and conscience, necessary, sir, in the fulfillment of their duty to mankind."

Senator Robinson, pursued by reporters as he left the floor the moment the Senate adjourned, said in his dictated statement:

"Manifestly the sit-down strike is unlawful. It is not within the rights of any individual or group of individuals to seize or retain possession of property to the exclusion of the employer for the purpose of enforcing demands against the employer."

Lewis Cites Macbeth.

"What Congress or other Federal authority can do about the matter at this juncture does not appear. Compulsory arbitration does not recommend itself. Mediation and conciliation and the promotion of collective bargaining as contemplated by the Labor Relations act, if the same shall be sustained, undoubtedly are helpful factors.

The Senate thus far in the session had carefully steered clear of the labor situation. This silence ended suddenly yesterday when white-haired Senator Johnson, his Floridatanned face grave and his voice low and serious, rose without warning to say:

"The most ominous thing in our national economic life today is the sit-down strike.

"It is bad for the Government, and in the long run it is worse for labor.

"If the sit-down strike is carried on with the connivance or the sympathy of the public authorities, then the warning signals are out, and down that road lurks dictatorship."

Johnson sat down and at once Senator Lewis arose to ask solemnly:

"Is the United States a government?

"We recall, sir, that the great bard has Macduff come upon the field in an hour of great confusion and inquire, 'Stands Scotland where it did?'

"Is this Government going to continue apparently unobserving an attitude where indiscriminate paralysis of every form of business is

Corwin Urges 15-Judge Court With Three Functioning Panels

Law Professor Would Assign One Group for Constitutional Questions Only; Proposal Stirs Arguments in Senate Committee.

By Robert C. Albright.

A silver-haired Princeton law professor with theories of his own about constitutional government and "biased" judgeships yesterday upset the decorum of the Senate Judiciary Committee and brought court plan opponents to his heels in full cry.

He was Edward S. Corwin, dapper, 59-year-old author of "Twilight of the Supreme Court." His ideas about "paneling" the court, selecting justices of known views and permitting the President to interpret the Constitution were deeply disturbing to Senators.

The fact that he expressed some contrary notions a year ago—triumphantly pointed out by opposition Senators—perturbed him not at all. Delighted, Chairman Henry F. Ashurst claimed a new convert to his "vice of consistency" theory, and presented the witness with his tract on the subject.

As hearings vibrated through a sixth day of testimony for the court plan, Senate opponents sought privately to sound out Supreme Court justices on their willingness to testify. It was learned that some justices are being quietly approached on their desires in the matter. A dramatic possibility that one or more justices might discuss the plan before the committee was seen in the offing. Chairman Ashurst has announced he will call any justice who wants to be heard.

Corwin the bespectacled, madishly dressed constitutional law professor, was scheduled for a brief statement. He stayed for 3½ hours of questioning, and when he finished other witnesses were dismissed.

His views that disturbed Senators, and provoked at times a verbal uproar, were:

Woman Shoots Count Boarding Train in Paris

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 17.—Mme. Madeline La Ferriere, striking 30-year-old brunette, today shot and wounded Count Charles de Chambrun, former French Ambassador to Italy, her lawyer said, apparently because she believed the count had caused her to lose the love of a famous man.

He said the man was "so famous his name cannot be mentioned" but asserted she declined to elaborate her statement.

French friends of the woman, however, said the man referred to was "a great Italian man of state" whose affections, they said she told them, she won after recent interviews.

It was known Premier Benito Mussolini granted her several interviews while she was in Italy.

Count de Chambrun, an honorary United States citizen, was slightly wounded when he was shot as he boarded the Bluebird Express for Brussels.

Police said Mme. La Ferriere, tall and attractive secretary to the editor of a Paris newspaper, freely admitted the act.

A single shot was fired from a "woman's size" revolver, authorities said, just as De Chambrun put his foot on the railway car step. His wife, the former Princess [illegible] had preceded him on the train.

"She's crazy! Arrest that woman," cried the count, turning toward his assailant. Despite his wound, he started to walk along from the north station.

Police said the woman threw her revolver on the platform and stood still exclaiming, "I've shot De

Copeland Unit Asks 14 Million For Safe Flying

Blaming many plane crashes on lack of governmental air aids and on inefficiency of some present aids, the Copeland Air Safety Committee recommended a program which would revolutionize Federal assistance to the airlines in its report yesterday to the Senate Commerce Committee.

Specifically to correct the airway aid situation, the committee suggested appropriations totaling $14,545,000. Of this, $10,000,000 would go for ground flying aids, $2,364,000 for work of the Weather Bureau and the remainder for research and development studies.

The committee recommended that this appropriation be made immediately available, with no restrictions as to time in which it should be spent. Present budget estimates call for $3,000,000 for ground aids, with authorization for contracts for $2,000,000 more.

Urges Airport Here.

The Washington Airport situation was also covered by the committee. The report stated that the problem of a proper field here "remains a sorry spectacle, not only somewhat unsafe but also no credit to our country." The report also declared that death of some official high in the service of our Government should not be necessary to arrive at a solution.

The committee's recommendation was establishment here of "a safe and creditable airport and also a proper auxiliary airport * * * without further delay."

Beleaguered Employes Wave Banners as Crowds Cheer.

New Labor Parley Called by Murphy

C.I.O. Head, Steel Firms Sign Pact to Settle Rifts Peaceably.

The Labor Situation.

Twenty thousand union sympathizers demonstrated in Detroit as sit-down strikers defied a court injunction designed to evict them from Chrysler plants.

Three Senators warned of "dictatorship" if the current wave of sit-down strikes is allowed to continue without Government intervention.

Fur-coated New Deal wives marched in picket lines in front of the National Pants Co. here, where 150 employes are on strike.

A contract providing for settlement of all labor disputes without resort to strikes was signed by representatives of five steel companies and John L. Lewis' steel union.

Nine persons were injured and 27 arrested in Chicago when a mob precipitated a riot in the Loop in an outbreak of taxicab strike violence.

Riots in Detroit.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, March 17.—Twenty thousand union sympathizers staged a riotous demonstration in Detroit streets today, shouting their support of sit-down strikers defying a court injunction designed to evict them from Chrysler Corporatoin automobile plants.

The strikers, members of the United Automobile Workers of America trying to enforce demands for exclusive bargaining rights, waved blackjacks and displayed signs reading "Give Us Liberty or Give Us Death" and "Evicters Keep Out," as the demonstrators snake-danced outside.

As the sit-down strikers held their positions for the tenth day, passing the deadline of a circuit court injunction and making them and their leaders liable, if the corportation obtains court orders to enforce it, to a $10,000,000 penalty, the crowds of sympathizers massed in streets surrounding the plants.

Two-Mile Picket Line.

Police estimated 10,000 persons surrounded the huge Dodge division plant in suburban Hamtramck, where 25,000 workers ordinarily are employed. A picket line 2 miles long was formed around the premises. An equal number blocked traffic for five blocks around the Chrysler Jefferson avenue plant, where a union band played and a group of girls beat time on tin pans as the crowds sang "Solidarity Forever" and other union songs.

The crowds dwindled in midafternoon as it became apparent no immediate action to force removal of the men from the plants impended.

Meanwhile, the big downtown department store, Frank & Seder, was closed by a sit-down strike called during the afternoon rush hour. Crowds of customers in the store were ushered out as the management announced suspension of operations.

Murphy Calls Parley.

Gov. Frank Murphy, alarmed by the ever-increasing spread of labor troubles, convoked a conference of Michigan labor and industrial leaders in an effort to work out a solution to the State's menacing industrial impasse.

Voluntary conciliation of labor disputes in Michigan was provided for in a plan of action worked out at the conference tonight.

Acting immediately under the proposal, Friar Frederick Siedenburg, executive dean of the University of Detroit, was appointed chairman of a conciliation board for Detroit. The educator will meet tomorrow with Mayor Frank Couzens.

Whether the board, when its membership has been completed, would attempt to deal with the Chrysler situation was not known. It would have no power to act unless the disputants requested it to, but it could offer its services.

The conference, before it adjourned, also adopted a resolution recommending that it "endeavor to aid in the present emergency by immediately preparing, introducing and sponsoring legislation providing for suitable machinery for State aid in the mediation, conciliation

Senate Passes Bill Giving Pay Boost to 1,267 Workers

Custodial employes of the Treasury Department would be given a pay raise of $60 a year under provisions of an amendment to the Treasury-Postoffice appropriation bill adopted by the Senate yesterday.

During House consideration of the bill, Representative William P. Connery, jr., won an increase of $755,240 in the appropriation to take care of pay raises for custodial employes in the Postoffice Department.

At Senate hearings, Luther C. Steward, president of the Federation of Federal Employes, called attention to omission of custodial workers in the Treasury from the provisions of Connery's amendment. The appropriation then was increased by $75,000.

Two Pedestrians Miraculously Escape Death; Safety Patrol Tickets 'Speeding' Motorist

By Howard F. Wentworth.

(Winner of first prize in the Nation-wide C. I. T. Safety Contest with his 1936 series appearing in The Post.)

Two pedestrians, ignoring all rules of safe walking, barely escaped with their lives in downtown traffic yesterday.

And there were many more who invited disaster by defying regulations, but these two particularly attracted attention of the new safety patrol.

It was on New York avenue northwest where the first pedestrian virtually took his life in his hands. He also admitted being an automobile driver and was familiar with Washington safety laws.

The patrol, with Traffic Policeman George M. Patton riding as observer, was cruising slowly along the avenue near Eleventh street. The pedestrian-driver had apparently just parked his car at the curb.

He locked his car and was standing on the running board facing the street. On the ground in front of him was a puddle of melted snow. He looked at the puddle and without raising his head to glance at oncoming traffic, leaped into the air, cleared the puddle and landed well out into the street.

The safety patrol car was less than 10 feet away when the man jumped. With a quick twist of the steering wheel and a jab at the brakes, the patrol driver missed the heedless puddle jumper by inches.

At the same time, the man saw his danger and attempted to start back. He slipped. Regaining his balance, he looked up—and laughed!

Policeman Patton was out of the car and escorting the man to safety.

"Don't you think," the jumper was asked, "that your tactics were a bit foolish?"

The man grew serious. He glanced at the heavy traffic, apparently realized what might have happened, and said:

"Yes; I guess you are right; I

U. S. Powerless To Fight Boom, Wallace Says

Rulings of Supreme Court Hinder Stable Recovery, Secretary Explains.

By Russell Smith.

Under rulings of the presently constituted Supreme Court, the Federal Government is without power to cope with continuance of the boom-depression cycle of which Federal Reserve Board Chairman Eccles warned Monday, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said yesterday.

In the light of Wallace's statement, Eccles' declaration that current price levels threaten inflation took on new meaning, particularly a passage in which Eccles said:

"The remedy lies not in a restrictive monetary policy, but in vigorous Government intervention with all the powers at its command to deal directly with the causes that might endanger the progress of a stable and enduring recovery."

Links Court, Economics.

Walace's asertion that Supreme Court rulings hamper Federal attempts to make recovery stable was the first instance when an Administration official has connected the existing economic situation, and the fears he said it has aroused, with the Supreme Court revision proposed by President Roosevelt.

His comment was made in the course of questioning by reporters at his weekly press conference on his views of Eccles' statement.

In other statements yesterday in the wake of Eccles', Secretary of Commerce Roper urged business and industry to study steps to prevent one of the "unguarded business booms" against which he said he began "sounding cautions" a year ago, and the American Federation of Labor said that "labor is strongly opposed to industry's policy of raising prices when wage increases could be absorbed by reduced costs."

Under what it termed industry's policy of boosting profits and dividends while accompanying wage rises with higher prices, the federation said workers' income is not keeping pace with advances in the cost of living. A similar policy led to the crash of 1929, the organization asserted, adding:

"We have lost half the gains made under NRA . . . Wages throughout industry must increase this year by 10 per cent or more" (in order to equalize an 8 per cent advance in living costs the federation said is in prospect).

In discussing Eccles' statement, which he termed "statesmanlike" and "well-rounded," Wallace said:

"All of us want stability in recovery, and all of us are afraid of a repetition of the 1929 boom. We want prosperity, but we don't want flash-in-the-pan recovery."

Wage-Cut Danger.

"There is danger," he continued, "of business men cutting wages to a point where it is bad for the general welfare, and there is danger of agriculture reducing production likewise to a point bad for the general welfare.

"All three groups labor, industry and agriculture) may tend to attempt to get more and more money for less goods unless all of them give hostages to the general welfare." He explained these hostages represent governmental control, and added that the ever-normal granary bill now being drafted represents agriculture's "hostage."

Earlier, Wallace told Southern cotton farmers, in effect, to beware of predictions of 20-cent cotton emanating from New York. Although he declined to say the forecast is unjustified, he said the rise cannot benefit farmers as they hold an insignificant proportion of the carry-over and that expectation of such prices would be only harmful to them.

McReynolds Called 'Oxcart Lawyer'

By the Associated Press.

Representative Celler (Democrat), New York, characterized Supreme Court Justice James C. McReynolds yesterday as an "oxcart lawyer."

In an address Tuesday night Justice McReynolds called on losers in litigation to take adverse decisions of the courts in a spirit of sportsmanship.

"His intentions may be good," Celler said, "but hell is paved with good intentions. He is one of the worst offenders on the court. He contributed to the majority decision against the child labor law."

Admiral Byrd Invited To Talk With First Lady

Philadelphia, March 17 (AP).—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of the President, invited Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd today to speak with her from the White House at the opening of a no-foreign-war crusade April 6.

Ray Newton, executive director of the Emergency Peace campaign, sponsors of the crusade, said Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of New York, had also been asked to join Mrs. Roosevelt in the program.

Politics and People

President's 'Crisis' Psychology, Employed in Forcing Legislation, Crops Up on Court.

By Franklyn Waltman

IF President Roosevelt had not done so well in politics he would have made a marvelous book agent. None knows the technique of high-pressure salesmanship and the potency of fear psychology better than he. Just as the slick book agent gets you to sign on the dotted line by confiding that if you wait another day the price will be advanced at least 25 per cent, or that the supply will be exhausted, so Mr. Roosevelt gets the country to accept his policies by intimating that direful things will happen unless he gets his way.

WALTMAN.

During the early years of the New Deal, Mr. Roosevelt persuaded Congress that so close was a fresh crisis that there was not time for its members even to read the bills which he sent to Capitol Hill. Later on the President permitted Congress to take time to read and study his bills, but he was as insistent as ever that unless his proposals were accepted catastrophe would sweep over the Nation.

And sometimes when a plausible crisis was not at hand, Presidential aides conveniently manufactured one. Thus, when Congress seemed reluctant to pass a bituminous coal control bill in 1935, John L. Lewis obligingly threatened to call his miners out on strike.

So successfully has this technique worked during four years that it is not surprising that the President should employ it to force favorable action on his proposal to pack the Supreme Court. In his address to the Democratic victory diners the President indicated there was abroad in the United States a spirit akin to that which has swept some of the countries of Europe and brought about dictatorships. As skillfully as any book agent he conjured up visions of marching mobs, bitter civil strife, overthrowing all democratic processes in order "to get things done."

A few nights later, in his fireside chat, the President became more specific. He did not dwell so much on revolutionary political movements as uncontrolled economic forces carrying the country on to a repetition of the disaster of 1929. As in the previous speech, there was a plain intimation that the Supreme Court was responsible and that unless he were clothed with the power he sought these terrible things would come to pass.

Having conjured up another "crisis," Mr. Roosevelt departed for his spring vacation at Warm Springs, knowing full well that the thought which he had projected would be elaborated by his satellites within the Administration and on Capitol Hill.

Thus, ever since the victory dinner speech we have had New Dealers on Capitol Hill whispering around that the country is threatened with "revolution." Shuddering, they pointed to the sit-down strikes as evidence of the spirit of anarchy and defiance for duly constituted authority that they claimed was abroad in the land.

They waved aside as immaterial objections that the "sit-down" strikes were inspired by the President's close friend, John Lewis; that the sit-down strike against General Motors could have been ended at a word from Mr. Lewis; that neither the President nor his Secretary of Labor had said a word against them; that Gov. Frank Murphy, a Roosevelt protege, had encouraged such lawlessness by his indifference to seeing the mandate of the courts within his State carried out.

There is some reason to believe that certain New Dealers welcomed the spread of the "sit-down" strikes because it gave them concrete evidence of the crisis which they contended threatened the country unless the President had his way. If that was their purpose, it was neatly scotched yesterday by the Progressive Hiram Johnson in the Senate.

In as effective a speech as ever was made in that chamber, Senator Johnson, in three sentences brought into the open and laid on the doorstep of the Democratic leadership responsibility for the continuance of sit-down strikes by declaring that "if the sit-down strike is carried on with the connivance or the sympathy of the public authorities, then the warning signals are out, and down that road lurks dictatorship."

It was a strategic political stroke, for it confronted the Democratic leaders with the immediate necessity of disavowing the sit-down strikes or being put in the role of approving them by silence—and the Democratic leaders lost no time in getting that baby off their doorstep as soon as the full import of the Californian's words dawned on them. Senate Democratic whip, J. Hamilton Lewis was the first to voice his disapproval of the "sit-down" strike and went so far as to call on the President to intervene in behalf of peace and security of honest property.

Questioned later in the day by the press, Senate Democratic Leader Joe Robinson asserted in a formally prepared statement that "manifestly the sit-down strike is unlawful" but questioned whether the Federal Government had any authority to interfere. Cleverly, but not convincingly, he attempted, by inference, to lay the unwanted baby on the Supreme Court doorstep.

Useful as the "sit-down strike" developments may be to the Administration as a stick with which to beat through its Supreme Court program, unless some clever political head and foot work is done very soon they may become a boomerang and injure New Deal prestige far more than they help it.

Another "crisis" which is being paraded by the Administration in the Supreme Court fight is that based on the present inflationary price movement. It is said that this is what the President had in mind when he referred to a "crisis" in his fireside chat. Since then several major New Deal figures have expressed much alarm and concern over rising prices.

As healthy as Administration recognition of the dangers involved in price inflation is, it is strange that no attention was paid to this situation until the President needed a "crisis" with which to scare up votes for his Supreme Court plan. The most substantial advance in wholesale commodity prices, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports, took place from the end of October to the middle of January—but the Administration spokesmen did not become vocally concerned until two months later.

'Ingratitude' Is Charged to Court Plan Attackers

Springfield, Ohio, March 17 (AP).—Representative Patrick J. Boland, of Scranton, Pa., declared tonight "leaders of industry and business" were guilty of "ingratitude" in attacking President Roosevelt's proposal for reorganization of the Federal judiciary.

The House majority whip, in a St. Patrick's Day address, painted a picture of 1933 and declared:

"Where were these great defenders of the Constitution then—those critics that are spreading false propaganda now about President Roosevelt, calling him traitor, if you please, and angling for dictatorship? Where were the leaders of industry and business? Now the ingratitude of these same people is bursting forth anew."

plained the recommended tax additions and increases and reiterated the committee's view that until these revenue sources are tapped the Federal Government should make no payments to the District beyond the charges for constructual services and the excessive costs of capital improvements.

The District's personal property tax on intangibles was assailed as obsolete, unworkable, and inequitable by the witness, who recommended substitution of a local income tax.

McAneny estimated that a 3 per cent income tax would produce $8,500,000 for the District government, though he explained his committee offered no schedule for the proposed income tax. A District inheritance tax, he said, would produce another $1,000,000 or more.

A doubling of the present 2-cent gasoline tax, he estimated, would give the District an additional $2,500,000 a year, and other funds might be obtained from revising the taxes on banks and utilities and substituting a motor vehicle weight tax for the personal property levy.

Differ on Gas Tax.

McAneny and Jacobs disclosed their first divergence of opinion on local fiscal matters in a discussion of whether an increase in the gasoline tax should be allocated to the general fund.

The New York banker contended that the gasoline tax, as such, should be abolished, and that all revenue from the gasoline tax should be placed in the general revenue fund. Jacobs disagreed, and stated that the gasoline levy should be increased only so much as needed for revenue to maintain agencies associated with motor vehicle traffic. He said, however, that the costs of street lighting and traffic control should be added to that of street building and maintenance.

Jacobs intimated that a jump of 1 cent or to 3 cents a gallon would accomplish this objective, whereas McAneny argued that the District might as well collect 4 cents a gallon so long as this much, or more, is being obtained by neighboring States.

Committee members, coached by a representative of the District Motor Club, asked question which indicated they agreed with Jacobs and are opposed to diverting the gas tax for general revenue expenditures.

The only major topic discussed at the hearing in which there was unanimous agreement was that the District should be granted broader powers of self-government.

"We believe the people of Washington would submit more readily to increased taxes and larger expenditures," McAneny said, "if they were given control of their budgetary and taxation procedures."

Asked by Kennedy how far Congress might go in delegating administrative powers to the District Government without a constitutional amendment, McAneny said:

"You could give as much authority to the District Government as the State Legislature of Illinois can delegate to the City of Chicago."

McAneny predicted during his testimony that Washington in 10 or 15 years may have a population of 1,000,000. In tracing the city's growth in recent years, he stated that it has grown steadily more independent as a municipality as its population has increased.

School to Train Envoys Hinted By Roosevelt

By the Associated Press.

Warm Springs, Ga., March 17.—The elusive, vacationing Franklin D. Roosevelt reversed a Capital custom today and called on the press, but his negative comments on public questions indicated he was determined to rest and remain out of the public eye.

Sitting in a closed car in front of one of the two cottages housing newspapermen, the Chief Executive maintained silence on such questions as the Supreme Court, world peace and taxes.

The presence at the wheel of William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to France, evoked the only positive news. The President said he had been talking in a very preliminary way with Bullitt about establishing a Government academy in Washington for training of Foreign Service officers.

He added, however, they had just "skimmed the edges" of the proposal which would limit training to commercial and agricultural subjects for men desiring to enter the diplomatic and foreign services.

Representative Disney (Democrat), Oklahoma, has a bill pending to establish a school to prepare men for all types of Government work, but the President indicated this was too large in scope.

The President sat in the front seat beside Bullitt as he chatted with reporters. Mrs. James Roosevelt, jr., sat in the back seat.

The President was on his way for his initial splash in the pool for Warm Springs Foundation sufferers when he stopped for the interview. He left the swimming pool early in the afternoon to return to his Pine Mountain cottage to write a brief speech for delivery by telephone tonight to the Charitable Irish Society of Boston and the Savannah Hibernian Society.

Receives President's Wire.

Shawnee, Okla., March 17 (AP).—A telegram from the President on her thirty-second wedding anniversary brought a bright smile to the face of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt today as she paused to read it during a strenuous Oklahoma speaking tour.

"I first met my husband when I was 2 years old and my parents went to visit his parents * * *" the First Lady reminisced as she prepared for two speaking engagements. She spoke here this afternoon and tonight.

It was a busy anniversary day for the First Lady. She arose early in the morning at Tulsa, drove to Bristow, dedicated an N. Y. A. council house and then drove here.

Members of the Fourth District Democratic Club here arranged for two children dressed as bride and groom to go on to the stage from which she spoke on "world peace," bearing a large wedding cake.

Daughter of Wheeler Favors Court Change

New London, Conn., March 17 (AP). Miss Frances Wheeler, daughter of Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, differs with her father on President Roosevelt's Supreme Court proposal, of which he is a leading opponent.

"There's more than one political viewpoint in the family," Miss Wheeler, a senior at Connecticut College, said in asserting the plan should come before any and all amendments.

French Strike Of 1,000,000 Is Ordered Today

Paris Workers Act After Rioting; Blum Fights to Hold Power.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 17.—A million Paris workers were ordered tonight to leave their jobs tomorrow morning in a half-day strike against Fascist organizations and there was talk of a nation-wide walkout as Socialist Premier Leon Blum fought to preserve his government, threatened by a wave of public reaction after last night's street rioting.

The Paris division of the General Confederation of Labor ordered the strike in the capital area in a statement which said the strike would "be a warning" to the government to arrest Col. Francois de la Rocque and dissolve completely his French Social Party and "other Fascist leagues."

Once Headed Croix de Feu.

The confederation also listed demands for "purging the army, police and the public administration," and blamed "Fascist provocation" for last night's outbreak at Clichy.

The strike, if effective, would bring Paris to a complete standstill. Only newspapers would be published under the confederation order.

It contained a warning of further action if labor demands were not met by the government. The nature of the action was not revealed.

"Resolved to finish with the enemies of the people, with creators of civil war, and with men in the pay of foreign powers," the confederation declared it would call a meeting of councils of its member unions in a few days "to examine the situation."

"In case of necessity, it then will take needed measures," the statement declared. It was announced that transportation will resume promptly at noon to take workers to their jobs, that drug stores will remain open, that milk will be delivered during the morning, and that street demonstrations are forbidden.

The future of the people's front coalition ministry, was in grave doubt, susceptible to overthrow by its right or left wing adherents, as the population seethed with anxiety and suspense after the fatal rioting at Clichy, the bloodiest in years.

The government, groping for ways to hold its weakened grip, sent police and mobile guards to patrol the city and its suburbs lest violent street battling flare up again.

It faced public indignation for the casualty list of five killed and about 300 injured last night in Clichy, the workingman's suburb and stronghold of socialism, where police and street throngs battled for three hours.

Not Against Blum.

An official of the Paris division of the Confederation of Labor said the strike would not be directed against Blum, but would be mapped to give him support in forcing the dissolution of "fascist leagues."

At Argenteuil, 2,500 workers in the Lorraine airplane motor factory anticipated the confederation's call and launched a sit-down strike as a protest.

The cabinet, after a lengthy session devoted to the Clichy strife, issued an appeal to the nation to avoid acts which might jeopardize France's internal peace.

The appeal contained a promise that the cabinet would investigate the disorders and punish those who might be found responsible for them.

Great importance in deciding the course of the immediate future, apparently, was attached to the awaited verdict of ballistics experts. They were called upon to decide whether the police, communists, rightist members of Col. Francois de la Rocque's social party or all three fired the deadly shots on Clichy's battle-torn streets.

While the wrathful inhabitants of Clichy roved the public square and surveyed the bullet-marked walls and the debris left by the fighting, it was feared for a while 6,000 workers on the grounds of the forthcoming exposition might set off another disturbance in the capital itself.

The workers put down their tools to hear Leftist spokesmen protest against a "Cascist plot," charging Col. de la Rocque's followers—members of the new Social Party since the Croix de Feu was officially disbanded—deliberately incited the Clinchy riot.

Police and mobile guards were rushed to the grounds today when detectives in the crowds reported what they said were signs of "restlessness." There was no trouble.

Workers resumed their labor only on condition the general strike be called tomorrow. They hoisted red flags over some buildings on the fair grounds bordering the Seine.

Again in the evening Leftists began to assemble in Clichy for a protest meeting.

Thousands of demonstrators packed the square in front of the town hall to sing "The International," raise their hands in the clenched-fist Communist salute and chant, "Hang de la Rocque!"

The March 5 protest by Germany was caused by LaGuardia's terming the German leader "a brown-shirted fanatic."

As Secretary Hull expressed this country's regrets for that remark, bitter criticism of American individuals and institutions broke out in the German press. The criticism became so vituperative that Mrs. Stephen S. Wise, wife of the noted rabbi, complained to Secretary Hull, and Ambassador Dodd was ordered to make "emphatic comment" to the German foreign office.

Twice in 1935 the United States apologized to Germany as a result of rioting in New York when anti-Nazis tore the German emblem from the liner Bremen.

LaGuardia Satisfied.

New York, March 17 (AP).—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, commenting tonight on the second apology made by Secretary of State Hull to Germany for the mayor's remarks about Hitler, said "the translation by the German government of the term satisfaktionfahig is absolutely correct."

"Again I am pleased that Hitler was so quick to recognize himself," LaGuardia said tonight.

He added "I am waiting to hear what Ambassador Dodd has to report."

Mrs. Love Rouses From Coma; 'Words Suggest 'Second Sight'

California Woman Accused of Slaying Husband Startles Sheriff by Calling His Name; Again Lapses Into 'Horror Trance.'

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 17.—For a brief moment today the conscious mind of Helen Wills Love, convicted slayer, broke through the "horror coma" into which she lapsed last Thursday and responded to the treatment of doctors.

In that moment, however, she amazed the small group of men and women standing beside her bed in a hospital ward of the county jail. "Biscailuz," she muttered, "Sheriff Biscailuz."

The officer, Sheriff Eugene Biscailuz, gasped.

"She has never seen me before," he said.

With that, the woman's eyes began to roll slowly upward. Her lids closed and she sank again into her strange state.

Six days ago, Mrs. Love was convicted of killing Harry Love, prosperous Los Angeles broker, who she said had secretly married her.

Shortly after her conviction, Mrs. Love told Head Matron Veda Sullivan, "I can will myself to die."

Psychiatrists said the horror of her experiences and the fear of going to prison for from seven years to life had induced in her a state similar to shell shock. She has ben fed through the veins a solution of glucose and salts.

This morning Dr. Samuel Marcus, psychiatrist, and Dr. Benjamin Blank, jail physician, went to her bedside. Dr. Marcus has been treating her for three days.

Words, half-formed, came from her blue lips: "Harry—Harry—please don't—please don't take it—Harry, you'll hurt yourself."

Dr. Marcus gripped her by the shoulders and shook her. Her head wobbled and rolled like a doll's.

"Helen, Helen, you are awakening," he cried.

He let her fall back on the pillow. With that, beneath her slightly-opened eyelids, the eyeballs could be seen, turning.

At first she was merely staring. Then, although no muscle moved, it was apparent she was seeing and recording.

Dr. Marcus said, "it's dangerous to bring her out too long. In two or three days she may be fully conscious."

Union to Drop Strike Weapon In Steel Strife

By the Associated Press.

A contract providing for settlement of all labor disputes without resort to strikes was signed yesterday by representatives of five steel companies and John L. Lewis' steel union.

Meantime, Chicago experienced its most extensive labor outbreak in several years when new violence appeared in a taxicab strike. A mob precipitated a riot in the Loop, overturned 20 cabs, stoned others and attacked working drivers. Police reserves quelled the disturbance after it had continued more than an hour.

Nine persons were injured and 27 were arrested. Federal conciliators proposed immediate termination of the strike and arbitration of issues involved.

Heading the list of steel company executives signing the agreement intended to prohibit strikes was the president of the Carnegie-Illinois Corporation, "Big Steel's" largest unit. All of the companies were subsidiaries of the United States Steel Corporation. The contract completed an agreement signed March 2, when Carnegie-Illinois recognized the union as a collective bargaining agency for its membership.

At Boston, the United Shoe and Leather Workers Union, an independent organization, reported that the Lynn, Mass., membership voted 1,424 to 18 to become affiliated with John L. Lewis' organization, the new union to be known as the United Shoe Workers of America.

Representatives of 2,000 striking workers in five woolen mills and the American Wringer Co. asked Mayor Joseph Pratt of Woonsocket, R. I., for relief for the workers' families.

Meeting Is Called.

The Committee for Industrial Organization tomorrow will open its active drive for union supremacy in the far-flung textile industry, thus launching a new offensive in its jurisdictional struggle with the American Federation of Labor.

This became known last night when Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, called a meeting in New York tomorrow of the newly formed textile workers' organizing committee, a C. I. O. affiliate, of which he is the chairman.

The meeting will signal the "official launching," he said, of a campaign to enroll a majority of the Nation's 1,250,000 textile employes in the United Textile Workers, an industrial union.

Rejecting offers of company-owned food, girl employes added a hunger strike to their sit-down last night as a strike of department store workers spread to two units of the F. W. Woolworth Co. in New York.

The strikers in a Manhattan store of the Woolworth chain voted the hunger strike after, they asserted, the store manager refused them permission to bring their own food, cots, and blankets into the store.

The new strike call came as union officials negotiated with executives of the H. L. Green Co.

Pickets Patrol Plants.

Sheriff's deputies evacuated 72 girls holding the folding department of the Simplicity Pattern Co. plant at Niles, Mich. Four Detroit hotels returned to normal operation when disputes were settled.

At New York the National Labor Relations Board petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals for a mandate to require Remington Rand, Inc., to reinstate 4,000 employes the board claimed lost their jobs last May as result of a strike.

Numerous wage increases were announced, including a 10 per cent hike for 1,300 employes of the Dupont company's rayon plant at Waynesboro, Va.; 10 per cent for 4,000 employes in 14 textile plants in the Carolinas and Virginia; 12½ per cent for workers in the Fairbanks, Alaska, plant of the Fairbanks Exploration Co. and 7 cents an hour for east Texas field employes of the Gulf Oil Corporation.

3 Senators Fear Sit-Downs Will Result in Dictatorship

"* * * A sputtering flame may set a house afire, saith the old adage, and destroy the city and all of its associations of family and home.

"If conditions as we now see them shall continue, what will be the result? If these strikes and protests against every form or order in society and government shall reach the point where men shall possess the courthouses, the instruments of law, and by their numbers and force shall circumvent the due processes of a peaceful government, what will be the end?"

Recalls Other Crises.

The bearded Illinois veteran recalled the action of Presidents Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson in previous grave labor crises, and then outlined briefly the history of the rise of Mussolini in Italy through control of labor. Then he warned, with upraised forefinger:

"We sit silent here, honorable members of a great body, the great leading authorities of the Government, indifferent to what this all threatens us with, and no one seemingly interested to avoid the sure consequences.

"Brethren of this honorable body, hear your humble servant. In every hour and condition such as now surrounds this, our Government, there awaits another Hitler, and there lurks in the shadows another Mussolini. It is but a matter of time. * * *

"What Is to Become of Us?"

"If at the City of Detroit, Mich., as is now reported, there is a move to seize the courts and to prevent the executive and judicial officers from carrying out their orders, and if on the other hand there is on the part of great masters a threatened combination to starve out the toiler, by which he can neither take water nor food if he dares sit in the premises—and then the two clash against each other, with victory going to the greatest force of numbers—then what is to become of America?"

King Attacks C. I. O. Chief.

Lewis then asked that the examples of Theodore Roosevelt and Wilson be followed by the Administration, that "some steps be taken on the part of the authorities of this, our country, to find what is truth and justice and report it to America."

King concerned himself chiefly with the statement that John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, had condemned large-scale unionization during the Sixty-eighth Congress as part of a Communistic program. He said that at that time William Z. Foster, Communist leader, was trying to organize all workers into a single union. He added:

"Revolutionary leaders in America are making this large-scale attempt now. There is a sinister relationship between that former Foster plan to seize control of the United Mine Workers and to capture leadership of labor through national outbreaks, with the present C. I. O."

Cites McGrady, Green.

King, holding that workers have a right to strike "for the promotion of their rightful claims," declared the sit-down strikers "have adopted a weapon which has been condemned by such very excellent labor men as Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady and by that great leader of American labor, William Green.

"I have seen newspaper dispatches relating that hundreds of armed men form picket lines around courthouses seeking to influence, coerce and intimidate the decisions of the court.

"These men are guilty of extortion when they kidnap a plant and hold it for ransom. * * * Labor unions marched forward under Gompers and Green for many years. I regard it as most unfortunate that there should be a schism in the ranks of labor."

Detective Agency Quits After Inquiry

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Civil Liberties Committee heard testimony yesterday that its investigation had forced the Corporations Auxiliary Co., a 40-year-old detective agency, out of business.

Charles C. Parsons, secretary and treasurer of the Akron (Ohio) Employers Association, testified his organization had employed undercover operatives of the Corporations Auxiliary Co., of Cleveland, but was not spending any more money for this sort of work "because Corporations Auxiliary has gone out of business."

Akron's four large rubber companies—Goodyear, Firestone, General Tire and Goodrich—contribute heavily to the association, Parsons said, and factory managers of the four concerns comprise its executive committee.

P. W. Litchfield, president of Goodyear, testified that his company had not employed outside concerns to spy on workmen since 1913, and said he condemned the practice.

HELP KIDNEYS PASS 3 LBS. A DAY

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, lumbago, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

and arbitration of labor disputes in this State."

The outcome of the Chrysler troubles remained in doubt as the Governor acted. To enforce the injunction for the removal of the strikers, Chrysler attorneys must obtain writs from the circuit court for arrest of the strikers. Service would devolve on Sheriff Thomas C. Wilcox. What action the corporation planned was undisclosed.

Expanded picket lines and signs which fairly shouted defiance gave visible evidence tonight of the determination of the strikers to resist any attempts to dislodge them from the plants.

At the Dodge plant in Hamtramck two mock machine guns, fashioned from wood and stovepipe, overlooked a banner which said, "We want Wilcox, the Army and the Navy." Thomas C. Wilcox is sheriff of Wayne County.

An American flag, surmounting a blue and white banner of the United Automobile Workers of America, was hoisted to the flagpole in front of the plant at the 9 a. m. deadline set for evacuation in a court injunction.

Automobile "Flying Patrol."

Half a hundred automobiles, constituting a union "flying patrol," cruised the strike areas, however, ready to spread an alarm should a surprise attack be attempted on any of the plants.

An unidentified man jostled a Hamtramck policeman repeatedly and finally challenged the patrolman to strike him.

The patrolman swung his nightstick. The man fell to the street. A group of shop stewards hastily removed the fallen man. There was no attempt at retaliation.

The most vociferous of the demonstrations was at the Dodge plant. Five thousand men and women, among them several score women wearing the berets and arm bands of the Flint, Mich., "Emergency Brigade" marched around the plant.

One hundred men wearing arm bands designating them as a "union patrol" helped a handful of policemen direct traffic.

Trucks were backed against most of the gates at all plants. But there was little other evidence of barricading.

Gov. Murphy appointed from his conference of 23 leaders of capital, labor, State government and the general public two committees. One, headed by Fr. Frederick Siedenburg, executive dean of the University of Detroit, was charged with a "study of conciliation and establishment of adequate agencies" for conciliation. The other, led by John Reid, secretary of the Michigan Federation of Labor, was delegated to "study an act on labor relations which will be proposed."

To labor, the Governor, in opening the conference, addressed a statement that while he sought to avoid use of force, "there is obviously a limit to this policy if orderly government, as we know it here, is to go on."

To management, he said, "the refusal of backward employers to recognize properly the right to collective bargaining has contributed in good measure to the present unfortunate situation."

Seeks Two Kinds of Boards.

He proposed two types of mediation boards, one "by co-operative action between employer and labor groups * * * that may be affected or threatened by labor troubles," the other special committees formed in "each county or community where needed" to seek peaceful settlements of disputes without suspension of work.

Despite the defiance of the court injunction by more than 5,000 strikers holding eight plants, Chrysler executives continued their thus-far fruitless discussions with union representatives on the collective bargaining demands.

Belief grew that efforts were under way for a meeting between Walter P. Chrysler, chairman of the corporation's board, and John L. Lewis, head of the Committee for industrial Organization suporting the U. A. W. A. strikes. Gov. Murphy declined to discuss these reports.

Chrysler production is at a virtual standstill with 60,000 employes idle. Other sit-down strikes have affected 10,000 Hudson motor car employes and 2,200 Reo truck manufacturing workers. In addition nearly 20,000 Briggs Bod. workers ar idle because of the Chrysler shutdowns. Hudson and Reo strike negotiations have been halted; Briggs negotiators are conferring with union leaders.

Homer Martin, U. A. W. A. president, and Richard T. Frankensteen, organizational director, declined the Governor's invitation to his parley, asserting it "will not serve to eradicate the evils of job insecurity and low wages."

Gov. Murphy told his conference that "as responsible citizens, it is our duty to find a remedy for such conditions (as lead to labor disputes) and set up in the name of government the agencies for negotiation and adjudication of differences without unduly interfering with the operation of the American system of free enterprise and free competition."

WE DON'T WANT BREAD MONEY

Liquor is a luxury—one of the good things of life, to be bought and enjoyed only after the necessities are provided. Whoever needs bread for himself or his family, should not buy whiskey.

The persons we want for our regular customers have definite incomes and definite obligations. They do not exceed the one nor neglect the other. We make sales to such persons with a clear conscience because Seagram whiskies are well worth all they cost to those who can afford the luxury of moderate use. We don't want to sell whiskey to anyone who buys it at a sacrifice of the necessities or decencies. We are not being idealistic. The House of Seagram counsels abstinence for some and moderation for all because such counsel is good business. Abiding prosperity for our business can be built only by the repeat orders of our wise friends. We don't want bread money!

New Dealers' Wives Picket In Pants Strike

Women Shoppers Call Wages 'Inadequate;' Willard Parley Today.

Fur-coated New Deal wives shouldered placards and marched in picket lines in front of the National Pants Co. yesterday, where 150 employes are on strike. The New Deal ladies protested "conditions in this shop." They will picket again today if the strike is not settled by noon.

Members of the newly organized Washington League of Women Shoppers, of which Mrs. Edwin Wheeler Coleman, daughter of Senator Burton K. Wheeler, is president, the wives said that after an investigation they found salaries ranging from $5 to $16 a week.

"Such wages are inadequate," Mrs. Mordecai Ezekiel, wife of Secretary Wallace's close adviser, reported. Mrs. Ezekiel is chairman of the investigating committee of the league.

A strike was called at two plants owned by the pants company here ten days ago. The pants workers went on strike the same day waitresses, waiters and bellboys struck at the Hotel Willard.

Willard Parley Today.

Arbitration of the Willard strike is scheduled for today, the moot question being union recognition. "Discrimination against a union member and unfair labor practices" will be charged against the hotel by Morris Verboy, organizer with the Hotel and Restaurant Employes Alliance.

A sit-down at the Willard ended in an armistice in which both sides agreed to various concessions until such time as the National Labor Relations Board could arbitrate.

Possibility of a settlement of the pants company strike today was seen last night in New York, where Sidney Hillman, head of the Amalgamated Colthing Workers Union, was to meet with plant owners. If no settlement is announced by noon the New Deal wives will picket the company's Eighth street plant this afternoon.

Among the uptown pickets who joined downtown strikers at 418 First street southeast were Mrs. Marquis Childs, wife of the correspondent here for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Mrs. Gardner Jackson, wife of the Washington representative of the Civil Liberties Union; Mrs. Charles Wood Collier, whose husband is with the Soil Conservation Service, and whose father-in-law is John Collier, of the Indian Affairs Bureau; Mrs. Mildred Burke, Mrs. Clark Warburton, teacher; Miss Margaret Stabler, Miss Catherine Nunamaker and Miss Ann Craton, of the WPA.

Confer With Pilzer.

Mrs. Colman's husband is with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Mrs. Colman said she was unable to join the pickets "because I have a very new baby at home."

Mrs. Ezekiel said her committee had conferred with Charles Pilzer, who operates the factories here. Pilzer has denied there is a strike in the plants. Three women were arrested on assault charges in front of one plant yesterday. They testified in Police Court a strike was in progress.

While strikers hung out of upstairs windows and hailed their New Deal companions, the league issued a formal statement on the sidewalk:

"The decision to aid the workers in their drive for unionization was made only after a thorough investigation of working conditions. The investigating committee of the league, headed by Mrs. Mordecai Ezekiel, discovered that the weekly wage range was from $5 to $16, which was considered inadequate to meet living conditions.

"The pressure of speed was detrimental to the health of the workers. Sanitary conditions should be re-examined by the proper local authorities. The Washington League of Women Shoppers believes the right of workers to organize should be recognized * * *" Officers Listed.

"The officers of the league are Mrs. Colman, president; Mrs. Childs, vice president; Mrs. Collier, executive secretary; Mrs. B. A. Gould, treasurer; Mrs. Ezekiel, chairman of the investigating committee; Mrs. Leon Henderson, chairman of the educational committee; Mrs. Thomas Elliot, chairman of the membership committee, and Mrs. Burke and Mrs. Hollander, co-chairman of living standards."

In the arbitration of the Willard sit-down strike, the union will protest the dismissal of Mabel Norman, coffee shop waitress, who, it is claimed, was fired because she testified for Garland P. Webb, a union waiter dismissed for "negligence."

The union charges that Webb's "negligence" consisted of serving a breakfast tray to Harry Sommerville, Willard manager, on which the manager's applesauce was on the wrong kind of a saucer and a pat of butter was not included.

When the Labor Relations Board investigated Webb's dismissal, it held that Webb's offense was not serious enough to warrant dismissal. The decision, however, stated that due to insufficient evidence reinstatement of the waiter could not be ordered.

At the hearing this morning the union will ask that the waitress be re-employed and that a preferential shop with recognition be granted their union.

Ga. Dry Vote Approved.

Atlanta, March 17 (AP).— the State House of Representatives approved tonight, 114-86, a bill calling for a State-wide referendum June 8 on prohibition repeal. The measure was sent to the Senate.

Hush-Hush or Health?

Mothers Neglect Own Cases But Have Children Treated

By Gerald G. Gross.

(This article is one in a series to acquaint citizens with the tragic neglect of the venereal disease problem in the District of Columbia).

"Shucks! I think altogether too much is being made of syphilis and gonorrhea in the District."

The speaker, an M. D. at that, probably never has met Mrs. A. socially. She takes her 3-year-old son to the Children's Hospital dispensary every Saturday morning. The lad was born with syphilis.

Mrs. A., a housemaid, has syphilis herself. Her job consists of cooking, washing and drying dishes, caring for her employer's baby and doing the other domestic work. On Saturdays, under some pretext or other, she gets a half-holiday and takes her child to Children's.

But the maid is not having herself treated. Obviously she can't afford to pay a private physician's fees. Children's Hospital does not treat adults. A former patient of Gallinger Hospital, she is eligible for that institution's syphilis clinic. But attendance there is out of the question because its one weekly session falls on Saturday morning, when she must have her son treated.

Not an Isolated Case.

Mrs. A.'s job won't permit her to make regular visits to any of the private hospital clinics and the Health Department's I street station has no night clinics for women. So Mrs. A. is allowing her infection to run its tragic course, satisfied that she is doing all she can for her young son.

Hers is no isolated case, doctor. Miss Edith McCoy, the social worker of Children's syphilis clinic, estimates that half the mothers bringing or sending their boys and girls there are going untreated. More than 400 children, about 85 per cent of them colored, are on the clinic rolls.

Many of the young patients in the hospital's gonorrhea clinic are children of other Mrs. A's, women finding the time somehow to have their offspring given proper medical attention but unable to look after themselves similarly.

While the doctor may never have made the acquaintance of Mrs. A. or any of her many duplicates, the nature of his particular duties would lead one to suspect he is familiar with official figures showing that the syphilis-gonorrhea rate per 1,000 inhabitants is greater in the District than in any of the States except Delaware, Maryland, Mississippi and New York.

Doctors Overworked.

He may 'pooh pooh' such statistics but has he ever gone down to the I street social hygiene clinic of the Health Department and into the treatment rooms? Patients being run like cattle through arm shots, hip shots and irrigations. Overworked doctors facing a seemingly endless line of candidates.

Drivers leaving their trucks parked outside while they pay their weekly respects to Doc Salvarsan . . . old men who walked 2 miles to get there . . . high school boys with guilty mien . . . fathers of large families on relief . . . ivory-teethed bootblacks who seem to enjoy the weekly sideshow.

Downstairs, a waiting room with every seat taken by "enrollees" waiting their turn. In the little office adjoining, a social worker trying desperately to impress upon a delinquent patient the necessity of missing not one single visit.

Everywhere, upstairs or down, the atmosphere of hurry, hurry, hurry.

The answer is yes, the doctor has been down there.

Two More Deaths Reported.

Two more syphilis deaths were reported to the Health Department yesterday. That made four so far this week, seven since March 1 and 42 to date in 1937. Fourteen of the victims were white and 28 colored.

At the present rate, the local syphilis mortality toll this year will go well beyond last year's 139, which was an all time high.

Fortunately, the commentator who believes "too much is being made of the syphilis and gonorrhea problem" belongs to a small minority whose numbers are diminishing daily.

Save for him, every one of the scores of doctors, legislators, executives, social workers, civic leaders and others whom the investigator has taken the opposite view, namely, that far too little is being done about it.

The Health Department, lacking funds to staff and house its solitary venereal disease clinic adequately, open more such clinics, improve its blood-testing laboratory and issue pamphlets at intervals to physicians and the public, is doing the best it can under the circumstances.

More Funds Needed.

So is the syphilis clinic of Gallinger Hospital, where congestion is still worse than it is on I street and there is no paid social service worker to prod patients who become careless about their visits, look into home conditions and perform the myriad other duties incumbent upon that profession.

Appropriations are needed in a measure proportionate with the rising tide of syphilis and gonorrhea, rather than on the basis which has been followed from year to year in alloting an arbitrary sum which provided for essentials of the moment and failed to permit expansion of facilities.

McGrath Trial Halts Abruptly Until April 7

Continuance Is Granted in Policeman's Hearing After 20 Minutes.

Trial board proceedings against Policeman William H. McGrath, former assistant corporation counsel, ended abruptly after less than 20 minutes yesterday and the case postponed until April 7.

The board, composed of Inspector William G. Stott and Capts. Lloyd Kelley and Jeremiah Sullivan, granted a continuance to Assistant Corporation Counsel Matthias Mahorner so that he might consider a plea of abatement on a charge of perjury. The plea was entered by McGrath's attorney, James A. O'Shea.

Through his attorney, McGrath pleaded not guilty to three of the four charges lodged against him several weeks ago, following his transfer from the corporation counsel's office to the Ninth Precinct.

At the outset of the hearing, O'Shea contended the trial board did not have the right to try the policeman-lawyer on the charges. His motion to drop the charges was overruled. He then entered the not guilty pleas and the plea of abatement.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, charged McGrath with accepting employment which would interfere with his police duties; performing for compensation services of a legal nature not required by official police business; conduct prejudicial to the reputation, good order and discipline of the force, and perjury.

The charges were lodged against McGrath after an affidavit was presented to Maj. Brown by Mrs. Catherine Richards, 2807 Fourth street northwest.

Trial of 9 Held In RacingRaids Set March 31

All Deny Guilt; 2 Were Arrested in Previous Police Crusade.

Nine men were arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage yesterday on gambling charges. All cases were continued to March 31 and the men were released on bond.

Captured in two raids Tuesday afternoon, the men gave their names as Carroll (Knubby) Nuchols, Moe Morganstein, James B. Morfleet, John W. Clark, Robert A. Murray, Max Wolf, Guy G. Glenn, Harry V. Davis and Paul A. Davis. They pleaded not guilty.

Despite the fact thay were charged with setting up a gaming table last week after police raided 14 alleged race betting establishments, Nuchols and Morganstein were released under $1,000 bond each. Their bonds last week were $2,000.

Morfleet was charged with conspiracy and released under $1,000 bail. The others were freed on $2,000 on two counts, conspiracy and setting up a gaming table.

Police seized the men in alleged gaming places in the 1000 block Ninth street northwest and the 2500 block Champlain street northwest. Tuesday's raids continued the drive started last week against betting establishments here.

Corwin Favors 15-Man Court In Three Panels

tices be paneled into three sections, with 5 of the new justices set aside to pass on constitutional questions.

That the "prejudices" of the present court should be weighed, and balanced in appointment of new justices "biased in the other direction."

That "the President has just as much right to establish his theory of the Constitution as the court has."

Prof. Corwin's first and third theses drew Chairman Hatton W. Sumners, of the House Judiciary Committee, into the already electric discussion. Ashurst gave Sumners permission to examine the witness.

Power Questioned.

First, Sumners questioned the power of Congress to give five justices, sitting as a section, the right to hand down constitutional decisions. In the end, Corwin said this was "just a suggestion" on his part, and perhaps it would not be well.

Second, Sumners slapped at the President's right "to establish his view of the Constitution."

"How could he do it, except through the court?" asked the House Judiciary chairman. "By sending men into the court as a football captain sends men into a game. Man to man, how else could he do it? I thought the Supreme Court had the last word in constitutional matters."

Corwin agreed the court had the last word only "so far as deciding cases is concerned."

The professor's statements on the subject of "bias" drew Chairman Ashurst and Senators Connally, of Texas; King, of Utah, and Dietrich, of Illinois, into the fray.

Corwin said the present court had "manifested a settled bias" on constitutional questions and had not based its decisions on "agreed principles."

"Then you are for this plan because the six new justices would have a bias in the other direction?" asked Connally.

Corwin said that was "one reason he was for it," that he thought the court should comprise "all kinds of judges." He explained he did not mean "bias" in the "judicial" sense, but rather on the problems of the day.

Ashurst Aids Witness.

"You wouldn't want to subsidize the court, would you?" asked Dieterich. "Just what do you mean, that the President appoint biased or unbiased men."

Corwin said he thought the President would appoint "competent and honorable men."

King interposed that Corwin meant men of "his own predilections" and Corwin snappead back that was "not correct."

"I want judges who would keep their sickle out of the political field and stick to agreed principles," said the professor. "Those we have today haven't done that."

Ashurst, a bit exasperated, attempted to help the witness out at one point with a little advice.

"Why don't you say you want unbiased men," he counseled.

"I want judges who are unbiased in enforcement of agreed principles," was as far as the witness would go.

Not Seeking Miracles.

Ashurst raised his voice. "Just say you want unbiased men," the chairman almost shouted.

The witness refused. "I'm not asking for any miracles," Corwin said.

The witness said he thought the President's plan "very moderate," but the "best thing that could have been offered to preserve our institutions undisturbed." He said he thought the court plan had only one "weakness"—that it did not guard against repetition of the present dilemma.

He favored appointing new members "out of our law schools" rather than established lawyers who have rounded out their careers. And he insisted the court is already "packed" and the President's plan would "unpack it."

Here Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, read a statement made by Corwin in February, 1936, showing the witness had altered his views on "packing."

1936 Views Cited.

Corwin's 1936 views, cited by Burke, read:

"One way to curb the court would be to 'pack it' with new members favorable to certain constitutional views; another way would be to require more than a majority vote on the court in setting aside an act of Congress; still another way would be to deprive the court of its appellate jurisdiction in constitutional cases. The first and third of these methods, it is generally admitted, would be within the power of Congress, but they are objectionable on other grounds. The court is already large enough and cases involving constitutional questions have to be decided somewhere; and where more appropriately than in the Supreme Court? One should not forget the old warning not to throw out the baby with the bath."

Corwin said that when he wrote that statement he didn't have all the facts before him. "I live and learn," he said.

Earlier the witness had quoted Chief Justice Hughes as saying "The Constitution is what the judges say it is."

Burke insisted Hughes meant an entirely different thing when he used that phrase as Governor of New York. He pointed out that the words uttered by Hughes read:

"We are under a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is, and the judiciary is the safeguard of our liberty and of our property under the Constitution. I do not want to see any direct assault upon the courts, nor do I want to see any indirect assault upon the courts."

Distortion Denied.

Corwin replied that he did not think the phrase he had quoted and was used in one of his books "distorted" Hughes' meaning.

In his opening statement, Corwin argued the President's plan "tends to rescue the Constitution from a disabling and nullifying gloss."

The process of Supreme Court interpretation over a period of years, he told the committee, has built up a foundation of conflicting constructions, from which justices now take their choice. He said they could have chosen other precedents, and reached different conclusions, even in the NRA case, unanimously invalidated.

Yesterday's hearings ended in a bitter exchange between King and Corwin, with the witness refusing to say simply "yes" or "no" to the Utahan's questions.

When Corwin facetiously offered to send King one of his pamphlets, because "I think you need to read it," King shot back:

"If it is as unilluminating as your testimony here, I wouldn't care to read it."

Prince Georges Ousts Crowley As Police Chief

Hepburn Named Leader After Stormy Session of New Board.

Chief Jeremiah J. Crowley was replaced yesterday as head of the Prince Georges County Police force by Arthur W. Hepburn, former sergeant at the Upper Marlboro, Md., substation.

Crowey's dismissal, marked the first step in the long sought reorganization of the county constabulary.

The action was taken at an executive session of the newly created board of police commissioners in Mount Rainier several hours after Gov. Nice at Annapolis had signed the bill reorganizing the police setup and placing it on a merit basis.

Under the new bill the county commissioners also are designated as police commissioners. They met at the offices of Perry Boswell, president of the board, and elected Joseph H. Blanford, of Clinton, Md., chairman of the police board.

Chief Crowley Summoned.

After a stormy three-hour session, Chief Crowley was summoned before the police board.

A resolution which had been adopted was read. It expressed the county's appreciation of his services and notified him that it was the board's decision that a younger man was needed as head of the new department. Crowley is more than 70.

Crowley replied, "thank you," and left the meeting.

He refused to make any statement other than the action was no surprise.

Crowley was appointed chief of the county force when it was organized by act of the Legislature in 1931.

He has been under fire since last winter, when seven privates under his supervision were indicted by a grand jury for conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Appointment of Hepburn, who will be known as superintendent instead of chief under the new act, was temporary pending completion of the reorganization of the new force. Temporary appointments for a period not to exceed four months were authorized in the police act.

The Commissioners are believed to be considering the appointment of another man as superintendent when details of the reorganization are worked out.

Other appointments made yesterday, also on a temporary basis, were Ralph Brown, sergeant, and William Gray, Jack Dent, Ed Merson, Oscar Beall, Arnold Naylor and Elon Turner, privates. Melvin Kent temporarily was reappointed desk clerk at the Hyattsville substation.

All those reappointed were members of the old department.

Pay Raises Provided.

The new act provides for an increase of $400 a year in the pay of the superintendent, and of $100 a year in the sergeant's pay.

It also requires public examinations to be given for all new applicants. Formerly there were no standard requirements.

Examination for present members of the force may be waived in the discretion of the police board under the new act.

Navy Unit Studies Jail Laxity Charge

A committe of officers appointed by Secretary Claude A. Swanson is investigating prison discipline at the Portsmouth (N. H.) Naval prison, the Navy Department announced yesterday. The committee will inquire into charges of irregularity brought by Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire.

Senator Bridges declined to amplify his statements contained in a letter to Secretary Swanson in which he pointed out that there was an "extreme laxity of enforcement of prison regulations" at Portsmouth.

Navy officials said the investigating committee would make a thorough and impartial inquiry.

Cab Driver Found Guilty of Assault

Wilmer B. Tippett, 23-year-old taxicab driver, of Ardmore, Md., in District Court yesterday was found guilty of criminally assaulting a 13-year-old girl in June, 1936.

He will be sentenced next week. Justice James M. Proctor heard the case which was prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb.

Liquor Offense Laid to Dr. Myers

By the Associated Press.

Harrisonburg, Va., March 17.—Otis L. Bennett told a Federal District Court jury today Dr. Walter D. Myers, Winchester dentist, shared in brandy and whisky which the Government charges was manufactured on his Frederick County farm prior to June, 1936.

The witness said sugar for the operations was purchased from the firm of William E. Cooper, Winchester banker and wholesale grocer, who is on trial with Dr. Myers on charges of conspiring to violate the Federal internal revenue laws.

Bennett was one of five named in a joint indictment with Myers and Cooper, who pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charges.

The Government witness said the still, which officers raided June 17 last year, had been operating since 1932.

Vandenberg Asks Pension Fund Cut

By the Associated Press.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, began a new drive in the Senate yesterday for a "pay-as-you-go" social security system. He charged that the Government is "using a tax on labor, raised in the pious name of social security, to cushion the General Treasury."

Vandenberg attacked the present law when the Senate began consideration of the Treasury appropriation bill, with its $500,000,000 initial allotment for the old-age reserve account.

WHEN FOOD LIES LIKE LEAD IN STOMACH

Don't Take Bicarbonate

If excess stomach acidity is causing distress after eating don't take Bicarbonate of Soda. You may aggravate the very trouble you want to correct. Scientists have discovered that Bicarbonate goes too far—it not only neutralizes the EXCESS acid but also destroys the NECESSARY, NORMAL ACID BALANCE of the stomach. Your digestive system is knocked out—no wonder you always feel distressed after eating.

To get safe relief from EXCESS stomach acidity ask at Peoples, or any druggist, for Cal-Trate Tablets—they contain NO bicarbonate of soda and are not a laxative. They merely neutralize the SURPLUS acid, then pass out of the system. Then you feel great.

Ruhland Urges Pre-Marriage Medical Tests

because the third party—the probable family—is an innocent victim. Society is decidedly interested because it is called upon to care for the offspring of such unfortunate marriages in costly institutions."

Appropriation of adequate funds for control of venereal disease was held imperative by the municipal health chief if progress is to be made in reducing the number of deaths and new cases.

He pointed out that his department still has only one social hygiene clinic, founded in 1918, although the population has increased greatly since. He said the clinic, whose work has grown almost tenfold in the two decades of its existence, is sadly undermanned and additional treatment and diagnosis centers are needed.

"Just how much venereal disease there is in the District no one knows," said Dr. Ruhland. "What we do know, however, is that new cases reported annually surpass all other infectious diseases combined.

"Only 4 cents per capita is being budgeted for control work, half of what should be spent."

Representative Pfeifer, an unscheduled speaker, who said he felt obliged to attend after reading an announcement of the meeting in yesterday's Post, said the problem is greater than any health problem of the past.

"We ought to be ashamed of ourselves," asserted the Brooklyn surgeon and legislator, "for allowing syphilis to become such a menace when we know what causes it and how to prevent, control and cure it."

He called attention to the fact that he has introduced a bill amending the social security act to authorize the expenditure of $25,000,000 for venereal disease control in the States.

Amelia Earhart Races Clippers Across Pacific

"bunching" of the flights. Although rain and overcast skies prevailed in the starting area, the forecast called for good flying to Honolulu with the exception of northerly cross winds.

The Pan American Clipper was loaded for an 8,000-mile pioneering flight to New Zealand by way of Hawaii, Kingman Reef, and Samoa, with a crew of six.

Share Facilities.

Pan American Airways arranged to share its radio facilities with Miss Earhart, but special transmitting schedules had to be arranged to permit communication from all three planes in the air.

Miss Earhart's husband, George Palmer Putnam, and her crew, Paul Mantz, Fred J. Noonan and Capt. Harry Manning, completed last minute details for the flight this afternoon, while the famous aviatrix rested.

About 8,000 special stamp cachets were put aboard the Earhart plane to be carried around the world to help finance the trip.

The undertaking constituted perhaps the most ambitious in the life of America's No. 1 woman aviator. Although she has flown both the Atlantic and Pacific alone, she never before attempted the difficulties of ocean flying between tiny islands thousands of miles apart.

Australian Air Route.

Although Miss Earhart whimsically said she undertook the big flight "because I want to," she also expressed the hope that it would aid in the establishment of a trans-pacific air route to Australia.

The flight around the middle of the earth was charted on a course that exceeds by more than 10,000 miles the globe-girdling journey made by the late Wiley Post in 1933.

Post traveled approximately 15,400 miles in establishing a record of 7 days, 18 hours and 49 minutes for round-the-world flying.

Miss Earhart said she sought no speed records on her flight, and gave no estimate of the probable time she would need for the hazardous venture.

Apeared Confident.

Equipped with virtually every possible safety device and three experts to facilitate the perilous 8,000-mile stretch across the Pacific, Miss Earhart appeared confident.

Besides speaking and code radio equipment, Miss Earhart had a radio direction finder, an automatic piloting machine, a newly invented substance designed to disperse fog, a drift indicator and a whole control board full of regular aviation instruments.

Her path across the Pacific involved unflown areas. From Honolulu she will pioneer an air trail to tiny Howland Island, where the American Government recently completed a landing field.

Miss Earhart's Course.

New Guina to Darwin, Australia, 1,384 miles.

Darwin to Rangoon, Burma, 2,322 miles.

Rangoon to Calcutta, India, 645 miles.

Calcutta to Karachi, India, 1,361 miles.

Khartoum to Dakar, West Coast of Africa, 3,309 miles.

Then comes the next ocean hop of consequence—from Dakar, on the African West Coast, southwest to Natal, Brazil—1,347 miles of water.

The next leg of the flight is 3,045 miles from Natal to Panama, after which her plans call for a 1,505-mile flight from Panama to Mexico City. The last leg of the journey is a 1,875 mile stretch from Mexico City to Oakland.

The Pan American Clipper, blazing a new commercial air line from California to New Zealand, had a floating "supply base" in the company's ship, North Winds, stationed at tiny Kingman Reef, about 1,000 miles south of Honolulu.

A Coast Guard cutter awaited Miss Earhart at Howland Island and another Navy vessel was taking up a position between Holland and New Guinea to be of assistance if needed.

Italians at Cordoba.

Madrid, March 17 (AP).—Italian troops have appeared in large numbers on the Cordoba province front where a renewed Fascist offensive has begun, Febus (Spanish) News Agency dispatches from Andujar, Jean province, asserted today.

Moors, Carlists and civil guard units which initiated a push on Pozoblanco, 36 miles north of Cordoba, have been replaced by a full division of 8,000 Italians, the reports stated.

Heavy fighting was under way along the Cordoba front, south of Madrid, with heavy insurgent pressure on the government lines. Pozoblanco was subjected to repeated air bombardments yesterday.

Defense Gen. Jose Miajo spent the day on the Guadalajara front where heavy artillery fire was concentrated while clouds of smoke and dust rose from Madrid, subjected to one of the most severe artillery bombardments of the war.

Gen. Miaja announced his force captured Moranchel, between Cifuentes and Brihueca, more than 20 miles northeast of Guadalajara.

Race Track Bill Recall Refused By Committee

Chairman Norton Is Firm as LaRoe Renews Attack.

The House District Committee yesterday again refused to heed demands of some of its members for recall of the District race track bill as Wilbur LaRoe, jr., chairman of the committee on civic affairs of the Federation of Churches, renewed his attack on the measure.

Chairman Mary T. Norton, backed by Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, and Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, stood her ground in the face of pleas by Representatives Hull (Progressive), of Wisconsin; Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, and Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, that the bill had not been properly considered.

Bitter Debate Expected.

Unless the committee reverses its position, the bill probably will be called up on next District day, March 29, in the House. Majority and minority reports will pave the way for an anticipated acrimonious debate.

Yesterday's session of the District Committee was marked by continued sharp exchanges between supporters and opponents of the race track bill.

LaRoe stated in identical letters to Mrs. Norton and Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, that any member of Congress who votes for the bill "is rendering a disservice" to the District.

"Any statement that the people of the District want this legislation is wrong," he said.

Opposition Cited.

"The Parent-Teacher Associations are against it, and they represent more of our citizens than any other organization; the civic organizations are against it; the Board of Commissioners is against it; the Washington Federation of Churches is against it, that organization alone representing over 60,000 church members.

"Any Congressman who votes for this bill is rendering a disservice to the District, lowering the moral tone of the Nation's Capital, extending an open invitation to gamblers and other crooks to ply their trade here, diverting huge sums from our merchants and protecting gambling at a time when our public officials are pleading with Congress to tighten the gambling laws and drive out the numerous gamblers already flourishing here."

220 Vote Opposition

The Woman's Club, of Chevy Chase, Md., with 220 members voted yesterday to oppose the bill permitting horse racing in the District.

The club indorsed resolutions for crime prevention, for extension of kindergartens, for conservation of natural resources, for adult education program, for restriction in immigration and for promotion of peace on the Western Hemisphere.

Mrs. Campbell E. Waters, chairman of the nominating committee, presented the following ticket, to be voted upon at the meeting April 21: For president, Mrs. Joseph Travers Maguire; for vice president, Mrs. Frederick M. Kerby; for second vice president, Mrs. Edward H. Helmuth, for recording secretary, Mrs. Arthur T. Davenport; for corresponding secretary, Mrs. Paul Butler; treasurer, Mrs. Kenneth D. McRae and Mrs. Louis Murphy.

Tall Man Existed 100,000 Years Ago, 3 Scientists Find

Philadelphia, March 17 (AP).—Three youthful scientists, two men and a woman, brought to the United States today a new picture of the ancestry of the human race, a more dignified origin than anything previously shown in the records of evolution.

They reported the finding of a tall man who lived in Palestine perhaps 100,000 years ago, who had a brain larger than today's average. They exhibited the skull cap of a 2-year-old baby, which lived in Java half a million years ago. They reported discovery of a wholly new race of men who were head-hunting cannibals more or less contemporary with the big-brained Palestine man.

Revolt Feared In Mongokuo Puppet State

Mongol Leaders Reported Desirous of Ousting Japanese.

By the Associated Press.

Kalgan, Chahar Province, China, March 17.—The rumblings of revolt came today from the dust-blown wastes of northern Chahar, whence fleeing foreigners carried the story of a new Mongol state seeking to sever itself from China under the guidance of Japanese.

A Japanese flag flew above the customs office 25 miles north of here, and separate customs service charges were being made, presumably in behalf of the new state—Mongokuo.

But there was much dissension because of the attempt at autonomy in the north Chahar sector, which Chinese here said: "We now consider a part of Manchukuo"—under Japanese sponsorship since 1931.

The rebellious Prince Teh Wang was credited with accepting the aid of Japanese military advisers to effect the coup. Other Mongol leaders were believed desirous of ousting any Japanese and remaining loyal to the China government of Chiang Kaishek at Nanking.

But the great masses of impoverished Mongols, foreigners who have been living among them said today, are despairing of aid from either Japanese or China. They were believed likely to revolt and seek to join with the Sovietized neighbor, Ouster Mongolia, vast area to the north which has been friendly with Soviet Russia.

Above The Battle.

There was nothing which can arouse the slightest criticism in the quiet remarks of Justice McReynolds at the Phi Delta Theta dinner Tuesday night. His observations on the American form of government, and his references to the role of the Supreme Court in our system, attracted unusual attention only because of the Administration's bitter assault upon the tribunal of which he is a member. Since he spoke to a small group, however, with no intention of arguing a case, his impromptu remarks cannot possibly be regarded as a reply to the President's attack.

If Justice McReynolds bent a precedent that has held since the days of reconstruction, he did so only because a far more important precedent had been shattered by the direct executive campaign against the highest judicial tribunal. Members of the Supreme Court have been publicly denounced as senile incompetents, as defeatist lawyers and as enemies of progress. The victims of this organized campaign of abuse have uttered no word in retaliation. The obiter dicta comments which Justice McReynolds made within the confines of his own fraternity serve only to emphasize the judicial objectivity of the court.

Yet several of these informal remarks are worthy of note in connection with the President's plans for judicial reform. If there are incompetents on the bench, the justice said in effect, they have been placed there by Chief Executives. "The courts are not responsible for those derelicts," he continued. "The Constitution delegated that power to another." More care in the selection of judicial appointees would undoubtedly minimize some of the abuses of which the President complained in submitting his bill to Congress. But there is no indication that Mr. Roosevelt himself is willing to forget politics in filling judicial vacancies.

By inference, Justice McReynolds attributed the Administration's court-packing plan to a "strange restlessness, a strange desire to break away from that which is proved—to rule or ruin." It is this aspect of the President's plan that has aroused such emphatic liberal opposition. As the justice pointed out, our system of government is the most complicated in the world. To operate it successfully, both skill and patience is essential. Changes of a fundamental nature must come through the expressed will of the people rather than through force emanating from a single center.

Slow as this system is, it has heretofore always proved sure. The people are overwhelmingly committed to it because so large a degree of personal liberty and local autonomy are secured. All close students of government recognize that the system would be thrown out of balance if the independence of the Supreme Court should be impaired. Opposition will continue, therefore, until the Administration is able to prove that no such result would follow its court-packing technique. And that promises to be an impossible task.

Chamberlain Of Locarno.

Although his parliamentary career covered a span of no less than 45 years, during which time he held a great variety of high posts, Sir Austen Chamberlain will best be remembered for his services as British foreign secretary between 1924 and 1929.

There was much in his conduct of that office which his contemporaries found to criticize. Liberals and Laborites denounced him for his seemingly die-hard attitude to Egypt and Russia, and for his frigid rejection of the Geneva protocol, one of the most promising peace plans developed in the post-war period. Tories, on the other hand, found much fault with what they considered his weak-kneed attitude toward China and his abandonment of the British concessions at Hankow and Kiukiang. But there is one superb act of positive diplomacy with which Chamberlain's name will forever be identified, the Locarno Treaty.

It does not matter that this pact has since passed into limbo, having been given a death blow by the remilitarization of the Rhineland, and that all efforts to find a substitute have thus far failed.

In its time it represented the very peak of European reconstruction. Europe's post-war golden age. Together with Dr. Gustav Stresemann and Aristide Briand, Chamberlain produced an agreement which was a model of co-operative statesmanship. With good reason its guiding spirit was acclaimed when he returned to England from the Swiss city. In a life of indifferent successes and occasional failures he had done one thing supremely well. That is about enough for one man's lifetime.

Danger In Rising Prices.

Ever since President Roosevelt came into office the public has been hearing about the prophylactic effect of higher prices on depression. Now that the rise is well under way, and gathering momentum daily, the President, Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and other authorities express fear that the upward movement may proceed too far and act as a brake upon recovery. While this sudden change of emphasis is rather confusing it is not necessarily inconsistent.

There is, for example, a great difference between moderate price advances of a selective nature that bring better balance into the price structure and indiscriminate increases that throw production costs completely out of balance, necessitating extensive revision of price schedules.

If all prices, including the cost of labor, rose and fell simultaneously and preserved the same relationship to one another, business activity would not be affected. In that case, real incomes and real wages, measured in terms of the actual goods and services bought, would remain unchanged. Consequently, there would be no need to readjust production schedules to accommodate them to alterations in the real purchasing power of the people.

But prices never rise or fall uniformly; some advance while others are declining. As a result fluctuations in the prices of individual commodities show wide deviations from the general averages. When any particular class of commodities is exceptionally low-priced in terms of other goods, as was the case for a long time with farm products, the producers of such goods have a limited buying power. Hence the strenuous efforts that have been made to advance prices of farm products without bringing about an offsetting increase in the prices of goods bought by farmers.

Certainly, farmers and wage earners with bare subsistence incomes cannot provide the effective buying power needed to support expanding industries. Hence, within reasonable limits, it is possible for industry to absorb and even benefit from wage and commodity price increases that add somewhat to production costs, but likewise expand market outlets.

In his recent statement on credit and monetary policies, Mr. Eccles issued a warning against rapid increases in labor costs and in prices likely to retard production. However, so far, there is no evidence that the current price rise has proceeded to the point of checking productive activity. The Federal Reserve Board's index of industrial production was about 20 per cent above the level of a year ago in December. In January a limited recession occurred, but it was attributed principally to shortages produced by strikes and floods.

The March 6 wholesale price index of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, on the other hand, is only 8 per cent above that of March, 1936. But the more sensitive index of the Annalist has risen 15 per cent during the same period, while prices of certain important industrial materials, such as pig iron, steel, copper and other nonferrous metals have shot upward with spectacular rapidity, in many cases above 1929 levels.

These increases, especially advances in steel prices, are partly the result of rising wages and shortened working hours, which are expected to improve the economic position of labor. Labor will not benefit, however, if the rising spiral of prices should push up living costs so rapidly as to throttle buying, retard industrial expansion, or even force curtailment of operations.

Hence the Administration has good cause to worry about the outcome of the present price movement. The price structure is always precariously balanced and easy to throw out of gear by artificial control experiments. That is now apparent even to the most ardent advocates of rising prices as an antidote for depression.

The French Riots.

The French Communists are said to have given Premier Blum assurances that they will not interfere with his plans for dealing with the situation created by the deplorable outbreak of violence in Paris. If so, there seems to be no immediate danger of disintegration of the Popular Front and resignation of the cabinet. However, the recurrence of street riots can hardly fail to threaten the government's splendid accomplishment in restoring faith in the political and economic future of the country.

If the riots had occurred a few days earlier, it is probable that the new national rehabilitation loan would not have met with the favorable reception accorded it. There is consolation in the fact that the rest of the loan is not to be offered until the autumn. But it is disheartening to any government to have its efforts constantly frustrated by political demonstrations that may mean little in themselves, but are extremely important in their effect upon popular sentiment.

If France were not handicapped by her multi-party system, dissident political elements could be dealt with more decisively and street riots would arouse less alarm. When the government in power is forced to rely for support upon some of the groups that help to create trouble, it is a very different matter. That is the situation in which Premier Blum finds himself. If he is too firm, he is likely to fall; if too lenient, he risks impairing the confidence of those whose financial support is so greatly needed by the government.

The House And Neutrality.

It has been fashionable to regard the Senate as the more truly deliberative of the two branches of Congress and to criticize the House as a well-articulated rubber stamp. If this is the rule, the neutrality debate has provided the traditional exception to prove it.

On this subject discussion in the House has been unquestionably broader-gauged, more realistic and more intelligent than were the Senate debates. In the latter body the Pittman bill was rushed through with relatively little consideration of the obvious inconsistencies and dangers inherent in certain of its provisions. Few of the Senators showed any readiness to contest the fallacy that the future can be controlled by the strait-jacket of a mandatory law.

The House, to its credit, revealed a growing awareness of the tremendous complications of the neutrality problem, many of the facets of which are yet to be revealed. And it is precisely because it is less rigid in fundamentals than the Pittman bill that the McReynolds bill, now before the House for final vote, is the superior measure.

The House measure is by no means ideal. Representative Bernard was entirely right when he pointed out that neither the Pittman nor the McReynolds bill distinguishes between the aggressor nations and their victims, that, on the contrary, "they lump together the robber and the robbed, the murderer and the murdered." Yet since Congrss is certain to write some kind of so-called neutrality legislation at this session the interests of the Nation would clearly be served better by the McReynolds bill than by the Senate measure.

Resembling each other in many particulars, the two bills nevertheless differ in two major essentials. While that sponsored by Mr. Pittman freezes the definition of what constitutes "arms, munitions and implements of war" on the basis of the moment, the McReynolds bill gives the President power to modify and extend such a definition. With air and chemical warfare constantly being developed, there is every reason why the President should be given that authority in order to be able to meet the changing needs of changing times.

The McReynolds bill is distinctly more statesmanlike than the Pittman bill in another particular. Under the latter measure the imposition of the embargo on shipments of essential raw materials to belligerents (but not on sales) would follow automatically with proclamation by the President that a state of war exists.

Senator Pittman admitted that what he had in mind is another World War of the kind that broke out in 1914. But since 1918 there have actually been numerous little wars in which there was not the slightest threat to the peace of the United States and regarding which no point would be served by penalizing normal American shipping, and American trade, as his bill threatens to do.

The House measure, by giving the President authority to impose or withhold the imposition of the "cash and carry" policy, or to modify that policy as the interests of the United States warrant, provides that measure of flexibility which is always essential to cope with unanticipated developments.

Bravo, Betty!

The fragile Mimi, of "La Boheme," is one of the most pathetic of operatic characters. In the olden days, when opera stars looked as if they were signed up by the pound, it was always difficult to fill that role.

Now, with the advent into opera of 16-year-old Betty Jaynes, the problem of impersonating Mimi realistically takes on a different aspect. This time the make-up experts are hard put to mold the immature lines and youthful expression of Betty into the unhappy, disease-ridden contours of Rudolph's love. In the gay Cafe Momus scene, surrounded by the fiery Musetta and other typical habitues of the Latin Quarter, Betty is apt to look like an American school girl on a sight-seeing tour.

But the audience and other members of the cast of "La Boheme" are somewhat disconcerted at seeing a Mimi who looks as if she'd never known the seamy side of life. Betty is not. This week she was given a magnificent ovation at the St. Louis Municipal Auditorium. Flowers poured into her dressing room. The impassioned pleas of Martinelli in his role of Rudolph poured into her ears.

"We really had a good time in that scene," Betty said, "the ice cream was real."

This is a free country (at time of going to press), and we suppose a person has the right to talk through his hat, but there ought to be some way to keep him from hanging it over a mike while he's talking.

The big problem facing the man who is preparing an income tax report: Whether to lie and go to jail, or tell the truth and go to the poorhouse.

When a girl sues for heart balm, there should be placed upon her the burden of proving that she has a heart.

Dr. Tansill's Resignation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My attention has been called to some letters that have appeared in The Post with reference to the reasons why I resigned from the American University. The authors of these letters appear to be completely ignorant of the reasons set forth by Dr. A. C. Christie and myself in relation to the termination of my services. It would pay them to read the newspaper press of Washington.

The authors of several of these letters assume that I am a Nazi propagandist whose main desire is to destroy American institutions. No one who has had the slightest acquaintance with me, or who has been a student in any of my classes in the American University, can for one moment entertain such an idea. It is true that last summer I traveled over a large portion of Germany, met many of the important leaders, and talked with people in every walk of life. As a result of these numerous contacts I was impressed with the new spirit of hope that one encounters everywhere in Germany. The dark shadow of the Treaty of Versailles no longer obscures the path to the future.

I was glad to find throughout Germany a feeling of friendship for the United States. I rejoiced in this as an indication of international good will. Like Dante, world peace has been the goal at which all my shafts have been sped, and I know only too well that world peace is possible through international understanding. I am too good an American and too sincere an advocate of international amity to support any program of fervid hostility against Germany.

During my entire teaching career of 20 years I have been a zealous defender of American institutions. Indeed, so deep has been my devotion to all that America stands for that some of my students have complained that I sounded the patriotic note too strongly. It is possible to trace this patriotic inclination to the fact that my ancestors have had an illustrious record for distinguished service in behalf of this country. In June, 1776, when America was in desperate need of loyal sons, my great-great-grandfather immediately enlisted in the Continental Army and fought in the battle of Bunker Hill. In the War of 1812 my great-grandfather won his first lieutenant's commission for gallantry on the bloody field of Lundy's Lane. My grandfather won the thanks of Congress for his brave defense of Guaymas during the Mexican War. My own father served for several years in the United States Army, and during the World War I was glad to give up an excellent teaching position in order to be of service to my country.

I have long been a member of certain patriotic societies. As the treasurer-general of the United States Flag Association I am now devoting all my efforts (without pay) to the promotion of a Nation-wide program that calls for the preservation of American institutions. I wonder if my glib detractors are doing as much.

It also might be of interest to my critics to learn that I have greatly helped many of the Jewish students in the American University. Whenever these students were badly in need of assistance they came straight to me. In this regard I can refer my critics to Dr. Jack Levin, of this city.

I hope this letter will serve to break down the ridiculous attempt on the part of certain misinformed persons to brand me as "anti-American." I am very willing to stand on my record. Can they do as much?

'Not On Death Bed.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This Nation is not on the death bed and the circumstances are not such that it is necessary to inoculate an arm of the Government with a sedative in the form of six "young bloods." We do not have to be duped or doped, as the case may be, so that we will pull through.

Let us hope that the consultation in the Senate caucus room will result in a decision which will adhere to the doctrines given the American people in the Constitution and thereby retain the theory of three independent branches of government free from the influence of each other.

The President's Mandate.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his "fireside chat" Mr. Roosevelt referred at times to the recent mandate of the people. That mandate certainly did not call for the program he now seeks to inaugurate. Had he been so bold as to ask for it during his re-election campaign, the returns in November would have been entirely different.

Before next election, if we can survive until then, it is my belief that the American people—Democrats and Republicans alike—will roll up sleeves and start clearing out the debris and mess made by the New Deal, which has turned out to be a New Ordeal.

Relief In Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: About two weeks ago the president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, Mr. Thomas E. Lodge, appeared before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations, in opposition to an increase in the relief appropriation, an increase which was being sponsored by the Council of Social Agencies, an organization composed of representatives of the private welfare agencies in the District. In support of his views, Mr. Lodge called the committee's attention to the fact that a little over $41,000,000 had been spent in the District for unemployment relief during the last four years. It is very unfortunate that Mr. Lodge did not tell how this money had been spent, nor what part of it came directly through District taxes.

Of the entire amount only $8,000,000 was supplied by the District as its share of the relief funds. Incidentally this was less than that supplied by any State. For a 21-month period ended December 31, 1936, figures issued by the National Emergency Council show that for work relief and direct relief the following sums were spent:

Highways, roads, streets, etc., $2,239,909.63; public recreation facilities, $653,155.18; electric, water, and sewage systems, $1,296,869.44; transportation facilities, $114,777.02; direct relief, $6,130,918.59; educational projects, $6,535,535.87.

In view of the community benefits which have been derived from these projects, it is difficult to reconcile the federation's program with the views of it's president, Mr. Lodge. Likewise Mr. Lodge's statement that District expenditures for relief are too high is an extremely difficult one to digest when we find that even the "notorious" Jacobs report points out:

Relief expenditures of the District are extremely low, its relief payments being approximately half as large as the average of other cities. The District has approximately half as many eligible persons on relief as have the other cities on the average.

It is my sincere hope that the federation will not permit Mr. Lodge's opinions to be construed as being that of the federation. It is likewise my hope that the federation will take the leadership in investigating this vital problem and making known its views. I hope the federation will find, as so many cities have in the past, that a common-sense approach to the relief problem will show that it is cheaper to provide relief than to provide hospitalization, incarceration, and increase the police force, which is now being contemplated and which the Jacobs report found was already overmanned.

WILLIAM B. GEORGE.

Communism Vs. Fascism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Public alarm about communism in the United States is hardly justified by the facts. That communism is alien to our country and dangerous is perfectly obvious. But a number of other foreign cults are far more powerful and active here.

In the last two Presidential elections the Communists had their Presidential tickets. In 1932 they cast only 102,991 votes. Their total vote had dwindled to 80,181 in our last general election. That would scarcely be enough to hold the balance of power in one big city.

Fascism doubtless has several times as much strength among us as communism has. The 80,181 Communist votes represent about 200,000 population. There are two or three times that number of Italians in New York City alone more loyal to Mussolini than to the United States.

Moreover, Hitler and Mussolini are far more aggressive as war lords than Stalin or any dictator elsewhere. The people are being warned and excited about communism and permitted to close their eyes to more dangerous and powerful cults in our land.

Sex Education And Health.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How long will men, women and children have to live, suffer and die prematurely because of certain ancient unscientific taboos with regard to morals and disease? The Post is to be congratulated for its editorials and the well written reportorial comment of Mr. Gross.

It will probably be some time before the schools will be able to instruct in health so as to prepare adolescent youth for the serious health problems they must be prepared to solve often before they leave high school. The traffic safety authorities have made great headway in gaining admission to the curricula of their teaching situations. The tuberculosis societies are rendering health service in schools and providing for health education with regard to the white plague.

The subject of sex education is still heavily taboo in most school systems. A little of the knowledge is bootlegged in here and there. Educational authorities and many social thinkers still believe the home should provide for this instruction. Investigation has shown, however, that the home is the last place where the great majority of young people get their knowledges of and attitudes toward sex. And frequently the information comes along for the first time with remedial treatment for many thousands with resultant broken lives which might have been averted.

The real obstacle to education with regard to knowledge, habits and attitudes about sex to prevent emotional and physical breakdown is the slowness of institutions in our fast moving civilization to adapt themselves to meet the changing problems of life. It is the same resistance that hampers economic and other social progress. Society still frowns on much education that really helps people to adjust themselves for life.

Too many adults are beyond hope of cure for lesions untreated years ago. Too many adults have their moral minds too case-hardened to think liberally or scientifically. Most adults do nothing but rationalize for the beliefs they tenaciously cling to, especially those relating to religion or morals. The solution to these problems lies largely with the youth in high schools and colleges today.

If The Post, and other influential elements in society, can suggest curriculum content in education acceptable to the community, and sufficiently virile to help adolescents adjust to life in all of its phases, syphilis and kindred sex diseases will be less a plague. The health office cannot do it all. The schools must provide more functioning health education beyond the innocuous teaching of health habits like hand washing, eating spinach and drinking nine glasses of water a day.

The Road to Aintree.

SPEAKING of the Grand National (said the Old Sport), I haven't seen one run for more than 50 years, and I am more than a little hazy about the details of the last one I saw. Fred Archer was the country's popular jockey at the time; so popular that "Archer up" had become more or less of a cant phrase.

But I had no particular interest, financial or otherwise, in the result of the race, and all I saw of it was a bit on just one small section of the course, far enough away from the grand stand. The only reason I was there at all was because the course was at one end of an old, familiar journey. I didn't know much about horse races, but I was an authority on The Road to Aintree, as were most boys whose homes were in Everton or Kirkdale, suburbs of Liverpool.

Ever hear of Everton? It's the place where Everton toffee was invented. The home of the old woman inventor still stands, I believe, on Browside, within a stone's throw of Prince Rupert's Cottage. It was on this hill that Prince Rupert in June, 1644, made his headquarters, after a vigorous siege which, tradition says, was only successful at last through the treachery of the governor of the town, Col. John Moore.

What? You never heard of Everton toffee either? Toffee is taffy, and Everton toffee has the hardness of rock candy, the deceptive translucence of amber, and the mellow sweetness of butterscotch.

* * * *

I know nothing of the road to Aintree today. The main road from Liverpool is probably lined with houses, and the stile roads (they were simply The Stiles—or Walton Stiles—to us) have doubtless disappeared. But the road to Aintree 50 years ago was a long delight. It took us boys half a day to reach Aintree and a plodding and somewhat wearier half-day back.

The Stiles began at Walton Church, or, rather, at The Hive, near by. The Hive was a very old inn with a very old swinging sign, which bore the words:

Within this Hive we're all alive,
For good malt makes us merry,
If you are dry step in and try
The flavor of its honey.

This is a punk rhyme, but there was nothing poor about the entertainment the house afforded.

* * * *

We boys knew next to nothing about the pike to Aintree, for we only saw it when we crossed it every half-mile or more. Our paths were over stiles and through meadows and along hawthorn-lined walks. A man could stretch his arms and touch the branches on either side. In May you walked through miles of pink and red and white blossoms, pleasing alike to eyes and nostrils, with here and there a stile to mount which gave you a new vista of field and meadow.

Sometimes your path would be across a meadow dotted with buttercups and daisies of exactly the same size, the daisies not those to which we are accustomed here, but the wee modest crimson-tippit flower of which Bobbie Burns sings. Then you'd walk beside a low cropped hedge and a ditch lined with wild primroses, or beside a low, round-topped wall, but not so round but that a small boy could walk on it. Be sure we never took the path when there was a wall to walk upon.

Every year there was something new in The Stiles. In the fall there was the waving corn, which in England means wheat, barley, oats and rye. And once in a while we'd descend on a field and steal a Swedish turnip—a rutabaga. I suppose the fact that it was stolen made it palatable. And there were blackberries to gather. The best places for these were in some old delf, and there were two or three on the road to Aintree.

* * * *

If you look in the dictionary you will see that "delf" is an obsolete word that meant a pit or quarry, but when I was a boy the word was common enough in England and it meant a stone quarry, but an old one no longer being used.

Gathering blackberries in old delf was full of excitement. You could get into high and dangerous places and imagine you were a mountain climber, and, quite incidentally, fill your basket with luscious berries.

There was always something to take home. Sometimes it was nothing more than a pocketful of hoptoads. Mother would later find some of them hopping around the kitchen or coal cellar.

I once went to school with two pockets full of them, and I was late, as usual.

Now it was customary for the late comers to be taken before the headmaster and they were then told to "double down." So we all stood in a row and bent down as though we wished to touch our toes with our fingers, and the headmaster would walk along the line and dust the seat of our trousers with a cane.

On one occasion I stitched my pockets back to where they would do the most good, and I felt myself extremely fortunate, though it was a little hard on the hoptoads and not too good for my pockets.

* * * *

And what has this to do with the road to Aintree? Why, everything! These were the days of real sport, and that is merely one of the lively incidents.

Tax Exemption.

I DISLIKE to harp on tax-exemption of State, county and city employes throughout the country, but that's my baby, and you might be surprised at the number of people scattered about the land who are not merely willing but eager to permit the great class of guest citizens to share the cost of the Government.

The Supreme Court decision in the case of William W. Brush, of New York, again upholding the exemption, came down at an appropriate moment, for it was delivered on income tax day and exempted a salary of $14,000 a year at the very time when millions of others, earning much less in private pursuits, were filing their returns and tossing their contributions on the blanket.

You can't blame Mr. Brush, who works for the New York City Water Supply, because the Federal Government wouldn't let him pay an income tax on his $14,000 even if he wanted to. That would be a tax on the city itself, and there are millions of other public employes drawing an aggregate of billions of dollars a year who find themselves similarly denied the right that other people enjoy of filling out schedules, sending in their money and eventually submitting to cross-examination on their most intimate personal affairs by reviewers instructed to go out and get some more wherever it appears that the victim has a little money left.

* * * *

THIS NEW disposition of the reviewing staff has produced some highly interesting little interviews, among the most charming of which occurred in an office in New York some time ago.

In this case the reviewing agent took up several hours of a busy man's day going over the items of his income-tax return for the previous year and found the figures entirely correct.

"This puts me in an embarrassing fix," the reviewing agent said. "I can't find anything wrong with this return."

"That's fine," the victim said. "Suppose you just certify it O. K., then, and let me get back to my work so I can pay some income tax this year."

"Yes," said the reviewing agent, "but that is the trouble. I am supposed to find something wrong and bring in at least a little money. So I just think I will disallow this small deduction here and charge you $18."

"That is a hot one," the victim said. "I make a perfect return and pay the tax, and you say you will have to walk off with some of my money just to square yourself at your office."

"Well," said the agent, "if I don't bring in a little money they will only send around another reviewer to take up some more of your time, and he will disallow something, you may be sure. Then if you want to see it through you will have to take an appeal, and that will take more of your time. So which would you rather do?"

"I will pay the $18," said the victim, and drew his check, plus accumulated interest for the delay in submitting to a procedure which the agent tacitly admitted was a stickup under the auspices of the Treasury Department.

* * * *

THESE EXPERIENCES doubtless could be multiplied many fold, and though I hesitate to incur more correspondence than I have, I would be willing to peruse any similar reminiscences that other income taxpayers may submit.

This is always a grave mistake, considering that the reviewer has free discretion to disallow legitimate deductions and take the victim's money and make him like it, as in the case of the $18.

Certain exempt employes of the City of New York have complained of the tone of my comments on their exempt status, insisting that they are not merely exempt, but forbidden by the good old sacred heritage of the Constitution to pay their share of the cost of government.

That must be a very unhappy situation, but up to now there has been no organized movement on the part of the guest citizen to demand a constiutional change to give them the same rights as others.

And there are no recorded cases of such unfortunates computing their taxes and sending the money to the Treasury as donations—which is one way they could do it if they are actually pining away under the discrimination.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

The Considerate Assistant.

("How can this gentle, respectful, considerate and reasonable suggestion to aid and supplement the court be so viciously condemned? It is no affront to say that when a judge is 70 he shall either rest or let his labors be somewhat lightened and his views a little tempered by younger help."—Gen. Johnson.)

I.
More over, Mister Justice!
Make room, old man, for me!
I'm just a bright young fellow
Who'll aid you mentally.
There's nothing in my coming
That's in the least unkind;
One object have I only—
To freshen up your mind!

II.
Edge over! Make it snappy!
I'm sitting at your side;
You're not, I know, so narrow
That it will hurt your pride.
Embarrassment? How silly!
I thought you'd heard the news:
I'm just a boy appointed
To lighten up your views!

III.
My aims are most respectful,
I'm gentle as a dove;
(Move over faster, Justice!
Or must I give a shove?)
No disrespect I show you
Nor anything like that;
My purpose here is simply
To show you where you're at.

IV.
A jurist of distinction
You've been for many years;
I never would affront you
However this appears;
I wouldn't try to curb you
Or drive you to the showers;
I'm just a kid who's sent here
To boost your failing powers!

V.
Your Government seeks only
To bring you peace and rest;
Console yourself by thinking
The New Deal knows what's best;
In giving my assistance,
My aims are high and true;
I'm doing this, Oh Justice,
Because it's good for you!

View Of Russia

Correspondent Reports On Morale And Living Conditions In U.S.S.R., Finding Neither Utopia Nor Hell.

By Violet Conolly.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Moscow.

SOVIET RUSSIA is a land of such violent contradictions and anomalies at the present time that you can find almost anything you are looking for, if you look the right way. Only a trick of emphasis, a proper manipulation of light and shade and you have Utopia or Hell . . . for there are elements of both there.

Soviet propaganda specializes in these tricks. It does not usually lie, but its virtuosity is even more misleading to the unwary. You may with perfect justice concentrate on the humanity of many clauses of the new constitution. On the other hand, with equal justice and perhaps more reality, you may point to the atmosphere of terror in which it was born and to the horrible concentration camps, where unfortunate wretches for "counter-revolution," proven or unproven in many cases, are building the military road to Minsk, the Moscow-Volga Canal, etc., under most inhuman conditions.

If you are economically minded you will find it hard to swallow the daily list of industrial triumphs paraded in the Soviet press especially as the only criteria at your disposal—such as plumbing, electric fittings, telephones, trains—seem to function extremely badly. With a little acumen you can easily prick the bubble of quantitative superlatives, as qualitatively Soviet industrial production is still far below world standards. In doing so, however, you are likely to overlook the very great achievement of the Soviet government in establishing a huge heavy industry and many intricate technical processes in a decade, while simultaneously training an army of engineers and skilled workers to run them.

Education Facilities Extraordinarily High.

YOU MAY quite legitimately hate the kind of mass mind, absorbent and uncritical, now being turned out by Soviet institutions, but your "pink" fellow-traveler who extolls the number of schools built all over the Soviet Union every year and the very successful campaign for the liquidation of illiteracy" is absolutely right. Few, if any, western countries offer such generous educational facilities to their people, old and young, as are now available in the Soviet Union.

It is all free, up to the highest professional and research institutes. There is also a widespread network of leisure-time activities, from flying to ballet dancing, which encourage talent of all kinds in the people.

Another "plus" of the Soviet regime is its handling of children—and mothers.

The order is intentional, as the mothers do not get half as good a show as the infants. Every infant is provided with a warm layette and blankets for the winter. I have seen many poorly clad mothers in Moscow and the provinces, but never an infant that was not snugly wrapped up. Great care is taken to instruct poor ignorant mothers in infant hygiene and the creches where working mothers can leave their children during the day are well run, as far as they go.

These new Soviet women with the physique of women policemen and the minds of Amazons have little of the eternal feminine about them or their tastes. Married and single alike seem to prefer work of any kind to a leisurely domestic existence. In fact the idea of leisure makes no appeal to them at all. One reason for this probably is that their surroundings in ugly congested apartments are for the most part singularly unattractive. Homes and gardens and good living in our sense of the word, they know practicaly nothing about.

Masses Discovered To Be Generally Moral.

IN SPITE OF the melodramatic villiany attributed to the fathers of bolshevism in several recent Soviet trials, the mass of the people is extraordinarily moral, and right thinking even to dullness. Men and women are indefatigable in "improving themselves," following all kinds of courses in their free time. They are in love with party orthodoxy to an extent unthinkable in our sophisticated world where uniformity does not command much admiration. There is no levity, no cynicism in Soviet Russia today. Russians seem to prefer work and play in groups, and where they excel it is usually in group work.

This is very noticeable at the present time in the musical world, which continues to produce fine orchestras but exceptionally few good soloists.

There are, of course, still small islets of opposition to all this dictation, but savage sentences follow the discovery of disagreement with even the most trivial party measures. This also induces conformity. "I used to know what communism was," sighed an old Russian woman in Leningrad whose husband was a leading member of the party before he died ten years ago, "but now how could anybody know from day to day, what will be de rigueur? We all have ropes around our necks."

Membership of the party is certainly no bed of roses at the present time. The purgings and re-purgings in connection with the recent political trials have been so frequent and intense that many of the smaller fry are nervous wrecks, wondering when their turn will come. When such as Radek and Sokolnikoff fall, who is safe?

Second Five-Year Plan Now Reaching End.

THE FIRST five-year plan went into operation in 1928-29 and the second five-year period is now almost completed, in fact is already completed in many branches of Soviet economic activity. It is a good moment for stocktaking in Russia for judging what has been accomplished for the ordinary people during these decisive years of Soviet dictatorship. How are these people now living? And still more important: What kind of people are these young Russians who have grown to manhood under two decades of Soviet rule?

The standard of food, clothing and housing is undoubtedly far better than in 1928. This applies in the first place to Moscow and the larger cities where the conditions are still much superior to the country. The Food-Trust shops are the best managed in the U. S. S. R. The food is attractively displayed and now includes a wide range of Soviet canned products, including sweet corn, for which Moscow says Anna Louise Strong is responsible.

Reckoned either in roubles (in proportion to the average income) or in foreign currency, food is very expensive in Russia. Just how expensive for the average Soviet worker and employe, whose wage for 1936 was officially calculated to be R. 205, may be gauged from the following prices (December, 1936): Butter, 16 to 20 R. per kilo; black bread, 1 to 1.50 R. per kilo; white bread, 1.50 R. per kilo; sugar, 3.50 to 4.50 R. per kilo; beef, 8 to 10 R. per kilo; milk, 1.30 R. per liter.

The official rate of exchange is actually 5 roubles to a dollar, a legal swindle, which is avoided by all permanent foreign residents in Russia with considerable success, owing to the existence of the Black Bourse. These prices are more or less standardized all over the Soviet Union since the abolition of rationing and the food-card system in 1935.

An interesting sidelight on the food situation in Moscow and Leningrad is the fact that so many of the foreign households get all their fresh food, including meat, fowl, butter, fruit, cheese and even milk in Leningrad from Finland.

Low Incomes Must Meet High Food Prices.

IF SENIOR OFFICIALS and Stakhanovites are now earning salaries running to thousands of roubles per month, they are far from the majority of Soviet workers. With anything from 100 to 150 R. a month, thousands of street car conductors, street cleaners, hotel and railway porters, pensioners must pay these high food prices, for there are no food tickets now.

The clothes industry lags far behind the food industry, both as regards the quality and quantity of goods put on the market. There are a couple of model dressmaking salons in Moscow, which the new Soviet rich can patronize, but the style and quality of clothes sold to the masses are deplorable. There are no good woolen garments for the cold Russian winter.

Rents are low and this must be set down against the notorious overcrowding in all Soviet cities. They are calculated as a fixed proportion of the income earned and not according to the accommodation occupied. In theory this accommodation should allow a certain number of cubic feet per person occupying the apartment, but fact and theory are far from corresponding to actual Soviet housing conditions. Repairs of any kind, whether to plumbing, electric fittings, dwellings or automobiles, cause the luckless citizen who needs them infinite worry. As there is no provision for such minor problems in the five-year plans, they would in many cases never get attention, if a small residium of private skilled workers, often organized in artels, did not still exist. Such lack of service is one of the major causes of discomfort and dilapidation in Soviet Russia today.

Paris Flare-Up

By Barnet Nover

M. Blum Faces A New Crisis.

ON MONDAY Premier Blum of France had reason to congratulate himself. His regime had just weathered a serious financial crisis. He had just been given a rousing vote of confidence in a very tangible form. Following a strong appeal by government leaders, the people of France had subscribed over 8,000,000,000 francs to a government loan. No clearer indication than this is needed that M. Blum's conservative financial program, coupled with a high interest rate on the latest loan, had struck a responsive chord in France.

Yet a day later the skies over France were again cloudy. A clash had occurred between Communists and Fascists in Clichy and, as a result, the government's internal stability suddenly appeared to be in danger.

* * * *

NOW THERE CAN be no doubt whatever that the Clichy flareup has elements of real embarassment to the government. It may, indeed, have dangerous repercussions so far as the French political situation is concerned. But it is nevertheless much too early to assume that the Popular Front is on the verge of cracking wide open or that the Blum government is about to give up the ghost.

Clichy lies to the northwest of Paris. Together with Aubervilliers, Charenton, Ivry, Gentilly, Montrouge, Neuilly and other suburbs, it forms part of that "red zone" that encircles Paris. Composed in large measure of a working-class population, its political complexion during recent years has been a Moscow crimson.

That Col. de la Rocque should have chosen Clichy as a place of meeting for his followers of the French Social Party (the erstwhile Croix de Feu) is surprising. The possibility that it was an act of deliberate provocation is one not to be discounted. Indeed, the authorities of Clichy, sensing trouble, asked the government to bar the meeting. This, for sound legal reasons, the government refused to do.

Inflamed by the presence in one of their bailiwicks of their bitterest enemies the Communists of Clichy and elsewhere in the "red zone" moved in to oust the invaders. What happened is still a matter of some dispute. What is clear is that at least four were killed and a large number wounded in the rioting that followed.

To be sure the tradition of political violence has long persisted in Paris. There was the march on the Bastille in 1789. There were the barricades of 1830 and 1848. There was the Commune. But most important of all from the viewpoint of contemporary French politics, there were the bloody events of February 6 and 7, 1934, when the specter of Fascism luridly raised its head in France for the first time.

* * * *

THE CLICHY riots stem in a direct line from those events of three years ago. This explains why the possible political repercussions may be serious. Unless the government proceeds to act vigorously in investigating the disorders and punishing the culprits, the conservatives will be strengthened in their belief that it is the Communist tail which wags the Popular Front dog. On the other hand the circumstance that Fascism continues to manifest itself as a latent force in the republic may now as before work to the advantage of the Blum regime by consolidating its supporters.

It is clear that the Clichy flare-up was not the conscious product of the French Communist Party but was a purely local affair. Indeed it is likely to be more embarrassing to the French Communist leaders than to M. Blum. For while they are bound to make a strong show of protest to the government for the real or alleged activities of the police who guarded the Croix de Feu meeting they daren't go so far as to imperil the government at this time.

* * * *

IT NEEDS be pointed out that there is a negative as well as a positive force operating to keep the Popular Front together

Positively, the Popular Front represents the determination of all liberal or radical republican elements in France—Radical Socialists, Socialists and Communists—to preserve the republic from fascism and thus safeguard the liberties that would be trampled under foot were France to follow the Italian or German example.

As long as Fascism remains an element to be taken into account—and recent Spanish developments have been a great object lesson for French liberals and radicals—the necessity of maintaining this united front against would be French Duces and Fuehrers is likely to be understood and acted upon.

There is also a negative factor making for continued cohesion in the ranks of the French Popular Front. The Radical Socialists, for their part, were very dubious about the Blum government's tolerance of the sit-in strike movement. They are also suspicious of certain of the more radical reforms put through by the regime. The Communists, on the other hand, have never taken kindly to M. Blum's Spanish policy. Nor do they view with any enthusiasm the new-found financial orthodoxy of the present regime.

* * * *

The right-wing of the Radical Socialists would, no doubt, be far happier if M. Blum would agree to form a "government of national concentration," one that would include all parties except the Communists and the extreme Rightists. M. Blum has made it clear, however, that he will only remain in office as long as he is supported by the Popular Front and not a day longer. He has no desire to become another MacDonald.

As for the Communists, discontented as they may profess to be with the inadequacy of the Blum government's social reform program, that program is far in advance of what a more moderate government's program would be. And they realize that while M. Blum or his successor could get along without the benevolent neutrality of the Communists they may find it difficult to get along without the Popular Front.

Instead of the government being the prisoner of the Communists the truth of the matter is that the Communists in France today are in a real sense the prisoners of the government.

Veniselos

By William Lyon Phelps

A Great Man.

He always said we should spell his name in English Veniselos, and not Venizelos.

On March 18, 1936, he died; and today is the first anniversary.

I shall always be glad that I knew Veniselos and Mme. Veniselos personally, and that I heard him make one of the most important public speeches in his long career.

Woodrow Wilson said that at the conferences in Paris the greatest man came from the smallest country, and, indeed, Veniselos made a profound impression wherever he appeared.

* * * *

It was my privilege to be in the Greek Parliament when he was prime minister, and it had been announced that he would make an important speech at a full-dress debate. The moment he took his place and stood at the tribune, there was the most absolute stillness in the crowded hall. His snow-white hair and beard were accentuated by his black clothes. But the thing that impressed me most was the naturalness, the conversational tone and manner of his address, which lasted over two hours. It was simplicity itself. He made no gestures, he hardly ever raised his voice above normal, and, indeed, it was as if he were talking to a group rather than making a public oration. I always feel more confidence in a man when his public speeches are informal and natural than when he roars and bellows, for it is plain that he has something to say and needs no embellishments in saying it.

* * * *

How much more attractive it is when a man's orations are like conversations, than when his conversations are like orations!

In talking with him some evenings after that, he was courteous, unaffected, sensible and kindly. I shall never forget him.

Earle On Labor

By Eugene Pharo.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Philadelphia.

WHILE GOV. HOFFMAN of New Jersey, by taking a simplified attitude toward the C. I. O. and its advocacy of the sit-down strike, seems to have made his State the logical site of a clear-cut battle between the opposing ideals, in the neighboring State of Pennsylvania there has developed a situation as varied and confusing as a surrealist picture of the millenium. For while a growing concentration of the Lewis organization upon various industries here insures that a great deal is likely to happen, there isn't any reliable proof of what it will be. The Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation agreement was only the first surprise.

Even in the legislative field, where early prophecies seemed to assure that if New Jersey tended to paint labor all black, the Keystone State would paint it all white and wet-nurse it into supreme power, there have cropped up uncertainties. A bill introduced in the Legislature toward the end of January that would have outlawed company unions and in several other ways have handed to labor objectives which it usually had to fight for on its own initiative, has been held up. And Gov. Earle has gone into a huddle with representatives of manufacturers, thus showing a totally unexpected willingness to let them attempt to write some portions of the legislation.

The result has been a temporary deadlock, for resulting conferences have given both labor and capital things to oppose, whereas before only capital was displeased. Not, of course, that anyone is yet ready to argue that because Gov. Earle has been willing to listen to manufacturers he is going to go over to their side. Rather, it is being taken as a logical gesture on the part of an executive who legally is Governor of the whole State and all its interests. Besides which it is recognized, even by labor, that without industries the State would have little or no tax revenues, and few jobs over which to dispute.

Labor Relations Board Chief Point Of Debate.

THE CHIEF POINT that is at present on the carpet, while a rash of strikes is breaking out in many parts of the eastern section of the State, is a proposed act to set up a State labor relations board. It is an important part of a general labor program that is embraced in some eight or nine bills before the Legislature, covering everything from workmen's compensation to the employment of company police and the right of employers to eject strikers from company-owned houses. Most of them can be described by citing the record of past industrial disputes in the State, in which local and State police and legal forces have been enlisted on the side of employers, and then thinking of it all in reverse, with the State aiding the labor unions and strikers. It is just such an effect that the proposed legislation is proposed to accomplish.

The only labor relations bill that is at present before the Legislature is one introduced on January 18 by State Senator McGinnis, a Democrat from Allegheny County. Among other things this outlaws company unions, and provides fines and jail sentences for those who violate its provisions. While the bill was reported to have the backing of State labor organizations, it was not introduced as a strictly administration measure. And early in March it became evident that whatever bill is introduced as an Earle measure will be less drastic. It was largely to arrive at such a measure, which would not be subject to opposition from employing interests, that conferences were set in motion late in February between labor and capital, with State representatives sitting in. These reached a stopping point on March 9.

At that time it was announced that efforts to draft a compromise bill had resulted in an impasse. Representatives of the manufacturers were supporting a 20-day period that should intervene by law between the appearance of a dispute, and any action either through a strike or lock-out. Labor didn't approve of this. The latter objected, also, to mediation features of the proposed legislation that they chose to consider as making arbitration compulsory. How it will all come out is, at this date, purely a subject of speculation, all of which will be colored naturally by recognition of the New Deal character of the State administration.

All Efforts Turned To Settle State Strikes.

WHILE FINAL enactment of legislation is pending, municipal labor relations boards, State bureaus of mediation, and some assistance from the conciliation service of the Federal Department of Labor are being employed to settle as many as possible of a variety of strikes that since November have provided tragedy, drama, and a little comedy for Pennsylvanians. These have included a plentiful sprinkling of "sit-down" strikes, but have been varied by "lie-down" strikes, lockouts, some rioting, a little murder, and, in one instance, a complete reversal of the usual sit-down technique.

In this case workers at the plant of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refinery in Philadephia, who did not choose to strike, have stayed in the plant in order to work, and have kept strikers from entering. The latter have had to content themselves with manning picket lines, where, as a result of sporadic violence, they have prevented to a large degree the movement out of the plant of any of the sugar being produced within.

The lie-down strike transpired in Reading in December, where employes, or erstwhile employes, of the Berkshire Knitting Mills, lay down in the slush and snow before the plant gates to keep the nonstrikers from entering. The net result was the arrest of more than 100 of them, while the few workers entered the plant by other gates.

At least from the point of view of the workers, the sit-down strikes, which in Pennsylvania have come to be accepted as a natural part of the industrial landscape, have been most satisfactory. While some of them, such as the one recently settled by the Electric Storage Battery Co. in Philadelphia, have continued for as long as seven weeks, the social activities of the strikers have been little impeded.

Dances, entertainments, movies and even in one case a marriage, which was solemnized through a fence between a worker on the inside and his bride on the outside, have kept the workers from becoming too bored, and readers of the press from forgetting about the disputes. The only really tiresome feature of it seemed to be experienced by wives of the workers, who were compelled to care for the furnace and do other tasks ordinarily performed by the absent men.

Injury And Loss Also Consequences Of Disputes.

NOT THAT MENTION of these activities is meant to minimize the seriousness that underlie the activities even of the sit-downers who have whiled away their time with dances and movies. In Berks County, where 17 hosiery mills out of 21 are out of operation as this is written, there has been violence, just as there has been on several occasions in Philadelphia and at the Sun Shipbuilding Yard in Chester. In Reading one man died as the result of having been hit by a brick, and rioting in Chester resulted in several serious injuries.

A picket was critically injured by a blow from a 2-foot length of pipe at the Pennsylvania Sugar Refinery, and one of the assailants hurled a knife at a policeman. A truck strike in the Quaker City led to two cars of strikers overturning a gasoline truck, and one man attempted unsuccessfully to ignite its cargo, regardless of danger to spectators. In various sections homes of nonstrikers have been attacked by hoodlums who have broken windows and daubed buildings with tar and yellow paint.

"Offensives" on the part of employers have on the other hand consisted chiefly of wage increases, most often in advance of strikes, which have been advertised as naturally due to improved business and rising prices, but which have in the main coincided with the beginning of organization among workers, which is at present being stepped-up by the C. I. O. in textiles, automobile parts and steel.

One of the most interesting of these wage advances was announced lately by the Hershey Chocolate Corporation, of Hershey, Pa., where the C. I. O., through the Bakers' and Confectionery Workers' Union, reports that it has enlisted a large number of workers, although the town of Hershey, with its company-owned homes and institutions, businesses and schools, is the most complete example of a benevolently paternal community anywhere in the country.

An announcement from Hershey Estates, 27 West Chocolate avenue, Hershey, Pa., on March 9 told of voluntary wage increases to 3,000 employes, and had appended to it the statement: "In answer to numerous inquiries we have had from employes the management wishes it understood that membership in any organization will not be necessary in order to maintain your position and standing with the company." This was quoted from a notice by the president, W. F. R. Murrie, that was posted on the bulletin boards of the corporation.

At present labor is waiting to see whether the obverse of the statement will appear, that is, whether membership in "any organization" will adversely affect positions of Hersheyites with the chocolate corporation. If the Earle administration succeeds in its announced objectives with regard to labor, such membership will not do so within the law.

Ford Will Build Georgia Museum Of Southern Arts

Ways, Ga., March 17 (AP).—Henry Ford, whose interest in historic objects led to establishment of a museum in Dearborn, Mich., will collect objects showing evolution of the arts in the South on his Southern estate.

The automobile manufacturer announced the new project yesterday at his winter home on a 70,000-acre estate 18 miles from Savannah, Ga. He said the articles, including machinery, early inventions and many other things, would be assembled "for educational purposes" in connection with his development for the school children of this community.

Ford also announced plans for a roadside market here, where school children will offer for sale products grown in their gardens or made in school. A manual arts building, which Ford constructed, is now in use.

"The profits will be divided among the children," Ford said.

Connecticut Ave. Group Addressed by Bloom

Representative Sol Bloom, of New York, was the honor guest and principal speaker at the annual dinner of the Connecticut Avenue Association at the Mayflower Hotel Tuesday night.

The affair was given in honor of the retiring president, Carl A. Martin, who turned over his offices to B. Houston McCeney, the newly elected chief executive. More than $1,000 obtained from the recent Style Show was turned over to charitable organizations.

Alabama Ends Dry Era.

Montgomery, Ala., March 17 (AP). Twenty-two years of "bone-dry" prohibition formally ended today in Alabama. Gov. Bibb Graves signed a proclamation declaring the Alabama beverage-control act, providing a system of State liquor stores, in effect in 24 counties which returned majorities favoring repeal in a State-wide local option election March 10.

Britain Opens War Games.

Hongkong, March 17 (AP).—The British Asiatic fleet and 25,000 troops "besieged" this British naval base today in the biggest combined war games the empire has held in the Far East. Barbed wire entanglements lined the beaches in preparation for the land, sea and air attacks.

River Pollution Parley Called For Tomorrow

Local, State and Federal Officials to Seek Speedy Potomac Action.

A three-horse team comprising local, State and Federal officials will meet in conference in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building tomorrow to discuss pollution of the Potomac River and its tributaries.

Immediate cause for the conference was the report of the National Resources Committee's special advisory committee on water pollution, which recommended that the Potomac basin be used as a giant water study laboratory and the subsequent report by the committee on river and harbor improvement, headed by John A. Remon, and sponsored by the Washington Board of Trade.

The Board of Trade, which has been an active spearhead in the drive to have the proposal of the National Resources Committee promptly authorized by the Federal Government, believes that the conference, which it called, will crystallize public opinion in the States bordering the river so that concrete action will be taken on a long-delayed matter that vitally affects the lives of every inhabitant in the Potomac basin.

Qualified as Laboratory.

The decision to use the Potomac as a laboratory was made because along the full length of the river are a number of sewage and industrial waste treatment problems encountered in the rest of the country.

Recommending that the Federal Government set aside $15,000,000 for experimentation in this area, the report of the special advisory committee made it clear that "any program of water-pollution control should include agencies of the Federal and State Governments that are concerned with the matter and the branches of industry responsible in part for pollution or seriously affected by it."

"An important detail of such a program," the committee's report sets forth, "involves the inclusion, in the control organization of regional authorities, metropolitan districts, or local abatement districts, for the comprehensive co-ordination of control work."

Setting forth that the plans now in progress are "both wise and expedient and are not subject to important criticism," the Board of Trade's committee after summarizing its findings holds that the proposed program will remove about 50 per cent of the suspended solids and 33 per cent of the oxygen demand of the sewage.

Five-Man Board Urged.

"This degree of treatment is sufficient to permit the river to recuperate sufficiently to support fish life and to prevent nuisance," the report states. "Additional treatment will be installed when conditions of the river require it. If the program be not abandoned or curtailed, the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington will be suitable for all recreational purposes except bathing."

Unlike the Tennessee Valley Authority which directs its program without consulting local or State authorities, the National Resources Committee recommends that an administrative board of five members be created, one each from the States of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, to be appointed by the governors of those respective States and subject to approval by the National Resources Board for the general administrative control of the drainage basin. The fifth member of this administrative board, the report holds, "should be appointed by the National Resources Board."

For purposes of direct contact with the National Resources Board, it was further recommended that the present advisory committee on water pollution of the water resources section of the National Resources Board be "constituted the directive agency to consult with and to keep informed on the activities of the administrative board, above referred to."

Pepper Discusses Judicial Decisions

Philadelphia, March 17 (AP).—Former United States Senator George Wharton Pepper, of Philadelphia, guest of honor at a dinner tendered him last night on his seventieth birthday anniversary, said "there is a lot of bunk talked about close judicial decisions."

In an address devoted almost entirely to reminiscences, the former Senator referred to the electoral commission which declared Rutherford B. Hayes elected President.

"I wonder how many people living today," he said, "realize that this decision of the commission, 60 years ago this month, by a vote of 8 to 7, averted what seriously threatened to be another civil war? There is a lot of bunk talked about close judicial decisions.

"The Senate acquitted (President Andrew) Johnson by one vote. The Electoral Commission declared Hayes elected by the same margin. In my own time in the Senate I saw an important question thus decided. More history and less rhetoric seems to me to be the need of the hour."

Bob Burns Says

Copyright, 1937

By Bob Burns.

I don't blame a person for tryin' to improve himself or herself but nine times out of ten, when you find one of those ultra ultra persons that "put on the dog" and talk with an affected speech, if you go back to their home town and visit their home, you'll find their old man sittin' around the house in his undershirt and in his sox feet.

I knew a girl like that down home one time. Nobody ever paid any attention to her until one day she won a beauty contest and she went to the city and got in the show business. There she married a rich man and got into society.

Shortly after that she came home on a visit and brought her society husband home with her. When she got off the train, it took the porter 15 minutes to unload her suitcases and hat boxes.

Henry Hink, the old station agent, went runnin' up to her to greet her but he gave him an icy stare. She arched one eyebrow and says, "My good man, isn't it possible to get a taxicab to carry our luggage to the hotel?"

Henry Hink says, "You don't have to bother about that, Maggie—here comes your Paw around the corner with a wheelbarrow."

THE FEDERAL DIARY

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

Maybe it's bacause Representative Ramspeck came from Georgia, where, according to popular notion, men still have a lace-paper valentine sentiment about women . . . But Ramspeck saw it and he said: "Whoever was responsible for this is certainly headed for trouble . . ."

He referred to the roll of honor, the salute that Federal Empolyes Union, No. 2, N. F. F. E., gave to a group of men and women who have held membership uninterruptedly since the organization's beginning 21 years ago . . . "These ladies are going to get you," Ramspeck told the crowd at the union's coming-of-age party the other night; the very audacity, he inferred, of letting the world know that any lady could be more than 20 years of age . . .

Twenty-one years' service to any one organization is something, and so, for the record's sake, this column will carry the names of the ladies:

* * * *

Mary A. Agnew, Clara M. Bahm, Julia B. Bradburn, Edith Mary Clemsen, Sallie F. Clower, Clara A. Cole, Eunice W. Curtis, Imogene England, Lucy M. Graves, Mary H. Heizer, Katherine Horan, Susan A. Hutchinson, Mary L. Kelly, Anna H. B. Kinney, Mabel P. LeRoy, Cora A. Lord, Mary M. McClure, Louise Park, Nellie I. Peddicord, Edna Peltz, Sarah E. Roberts, Margaret C. Robertson, Elizabeth Southwick, Ione M. Stanton, Mary J. Van Hook and Lizzie Yeatman.

The sub-conscious mind of people who handle Government press releases must register, somehow, the great diversity of the Government's interests, but they certainly must become impressed, indeed, when those releases are laid end to end for the expressed study, or even a casual glimpse, of all the things the Government concerns itself with . . . Pulling some of these releases from a vast stack on the desk, we find a few of the Givernment's interests, as follows: "Indications are that Italy is confronted with a serious olive oil shortage" . . . "Dry land wheat farmers in the winter wheat aera of the Great Plains—when a lack of soil moisture at seeding time foretells almost certain crop failure—would be much better off to fallow their land for a year, unless some crop other than wheat is to be grown" . . . "The Smithsonian Institution will conduct an expedition for systematic biological exploration of the shallow waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea." . . . "The vaccination of cattle against Bang's disease during calfhood is a promising means of combatting this serious malady" . . . "Proclamation by the President has changed the Cumberland National Forest Purchase Unit in Kentucky into a full-fledged National Forest" . . . "Darkness as well as light seems to be essential for life on earth . . . If there were no light, this would be a desolate planet with extremely stunted vegetation and correspondingly meager food supply for animal life . . ."

The Missouri State Society of Washington will celebrate "Army Night" with a party at the Shoreham Hotel tomorrow evening. Mathias, Division of Public Debt Accounts and Audits; secretary, Mrs. Ola G. King, Loans and Currency; treasurer, A. D. Irish Groups Hear Address By Roosevelt

Speaks on Radio Hookup to Boston, Savannah Societies.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, March 17.—Leaders of Boston's Irish tonight gathered at green-bedecked tables to celebrate the 200th birthday of the Charitable Irish Society, an anniversary marked by a telephoned address by President Roosevelt.

Places were set at the speaker's table for a representative of the Federal Government, Robert Jackson, Assistant United States Attorney General; for the President's eldest son, James; for William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston; Gov. Charles F. Hurley, of Massachusetts, and Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield of Boston.

The text of the President's address follows:

It gives me great pleasure from this quiet spot in Georgia hills to greet my friends of the Charitable Irish Society of Boston and the Hibernian Society of Savannah.

Many Societies Celebrate.

Although we think of ourselves sometimes as a very young civilization, I know of no better illustration of our historic background than the story of the origin of the great Irish societies formed for charitable purposes along the whole line of our Atlantic Coast.

You in Boston, celebrating your 200th anniversary, are the oldest of the family. You in Savannah, celebrating your 125th anniversary, are the youngest. Celebrating this 17th of March are your other brothers—the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, in the City of New York and in Philadelphia, and the Hibernian societies in Baltimore and Charleston.

In all these generations your societies have lived up to the noble legend Non Sibi Sed Aliis—not for ourselves but for others. You have aided not only your own members but many others who might be deserving of your charity. You have aided not Irishmen alone or the descendants of Irishmen—you have contributed greatly to the good of your communities as a whole.

I have a particular tenderness for St. Patrick's Day for, as some of you know, it was on the 17th of March, 1905, that a Roosevelt wedding took place in New York City to the accompaniment of bands playing their way up Fifth avenue to the tune of "The Wearin' of the Green." On that occasion New York had two great attractions—the St. Patrick's Day parade and President Theodore Roosevelt, who had come from Washington to give the bride away. I might add that it was wholly natural that in the spotlight of these two attractions the bride and the bridegroom were almost entirely overlooked.

Today, therefore, I am getting even—taking an actual part, even though it be by telephone, in a celebration in the North and another celebration in the South.

Roosevelt "Thrilled."

Yes, I am always thrilled by St. Patrick's Day—The day that Irishmen the world over garner to their hearts and souls tenderest memories, recall the ancient glories of Erin and renew their allegiance to the great apostle of 1,500 years ago. Through all the vicissitudes of these 15 centuries—through tramplings and burnings—through war and slaughter—in times of plenty or in times of famine—Ireland, and the descendants of Ireland, have been faithful to the heritage of St. Patrick.

The same devotion and steadfastness to the cause of liberty within the home land itself has accompanied the Irish wherever they have gone—even to the far corners of the earth. Our own country owes a great debt to their contribution to its upbuilding. They have borne arms in our wars both in the Colonial and the national periods. In commerce, agriculture and industry, in the arts and sciences, in literature, in the professions and in the councils of state they have shown special aptitude and peculiar talent.

There is a further happy coincidence in this greeting which I am sending to Boston and to Savannah—my children are the direct descendants of pioneer settlers of both your cities, Savannah through their mother and Boston through their father. Furthermore, I am proud to participate in these celebrations and to have this fellowship with organizations which in former years were addressed by predecessors of mine in the Presidency of the United States.

"Not for ourselves but for others." That motto can well be the inspiration of all of us—not for the fine purposes of charity alone, but also for our guidance in our public and private service. Selfishness is without doubt the greatest danger that confronts our beloved country today. Good old St. Patrick was the epitome of unselfishness. May we follow in his footsteps.

Smith Speaks at Irish Dinner.

New York, March 17 (AP).—Alfred E. Smith, Democratic candidate for President in 1928, tonight declared that "if there is any question of changing the Constitution the Irish are going to enter into the discussion," but that "evasion is one thing we Irish don't stand for."

The former Governor did not at any time during his address at the annual dinner of the Sons of St. Patrick mention President Roosevelt's court proposal, but he was loudly applauded when he said the Irish during his lifetime had always stood for "everything right and decent—and that means judicial process."

He spoke on the same program with Postmaster General James A. Farley. Farley did not mention the court proposal.

Senators Join City's Tribute To St. Patrick

Ashurst and Connally Laud Contributions of Erin to World.

Striking similar notes in praise of Irish contributions to the world of politics and culture, Senators Henry F. Ashurst, of Arizona, and Thomas Connally, of Texas, last night closed Washington's day-long celebration in honor of Ireland's patron saint, St. Patrick.

"We may claim a royal heritage," declared Senator Connally, speaking before the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, "not because every Irishman is descended from an Irish king, but because Ireland, disenfranchised at home, from her emerald throne has sent her royal mandates and her messengers of statecraft, oratory, letters and culture, to every corner of the civilized globe, and has mastered the minds and enchanted the imaginations of men of every race."

Declaring that Ireland, "by her shining example of justice, will cause the countries of Europe to turn to her for guidance in their trouble," Senator Ashurst, speaking before the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies Auxiliary, predicted that from this leadership of Ireland, "peace would come in Europe without expenditure of money and without cost of blood."

Both gatherings were in the Mayflower Hotel.

With Associate Justice Pierce Butler of the United States Supreme Court sitting at his right hand, Brien McMahon, Assistant Attorney General, speaking before the Friendly Sons, declared the "false prophets" who cry out against social legislation are forstering the growth of dictatorship.

"Do not repress fascism and communism by statute," he said. "Instead, eradicate poverty and unemployment. Destroy the deplorable conditions which cause them, and the isms will disappear."

As an additional part of their celebration, the Friendly Sons presented "Lord Edward Fitzgerald," a play with music, written by Thomas W. Brahany, in collaboration with Denis E. Connell.

For the Friendly Sons Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University, asked the invocation, and the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House of Representatives, pronounced benediction.

At the speakers' table were Martin J. McNamara, Maj. Gen. Edward A. Markham, Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, Rt. Rev. David O'Dwyer, Brien McMahon, Associate Justice Pierce Butler, Col. Arthur O'Brien, Senator Connally, Leo. T. Crowley, James Shera Montgomery, Rev. Patrick J. Healy and Assistant Attorney General Joseph B. Keenan.

The Hibernians were also addressed by the Rev. Timothy N. McCarthy, district chaplain of the order; James Conlon, president of the Commodore Barry Division, and Miss Theresa E. Collins, District president of the Ladies Auxiliary.

Earlier in the day the Irish War Veterans of the United States, District Post 17, had gathered at the monument of Commodore John Barry. They laid a wreath at the base of the statue of "The Father of the American Navy," and then moved on to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery. There Representative Michael Stack, of Pennsylvania, spoke briefly. Chaplain Patrick J. Ryan, of Walter Reed Hospital, officiated at both services.

Snakes at Zoo Care Not a Whit For Day of Erin's Patron Saint

Erin's children wore the green yesterday because 'twas the 17th of March; they held dances last night and were glad that they were Erin's children, but the snakes that St. Patrick drove from the OLD Sod didn't care one way or another about it.

The National Broadcasting Co. sent some people to the Zoo to find out how the snakes react to St. Patrick's Day. They sent an announcer and he brought his mike so he could tell the Nation how the snakes react.

He placed his mike in front of the ornate and glass-fronted lair of a big copperhead. The announcer had a friendly and bland face, fairly soothing eyes. The copperhead had a sharp, unfriendly face and piercing, unfriendly eyes.

The announcer adjusted his mike and withal was very active. The copperhead gave one indifferent flap of his tail and decidedly was very sluggish. A crowd gathered around and some of the children said, "Look at the big snake," while others said, "Oh, look, a radio announcer!"

The announcer greeted the Nation and explained how he stood before the lair of a big copperhead, all to learn how a copperhead would react to a day that honors a saint who drove the snakes from Ireland, reputedly.

The announcer said that it was fortunate to have on hand Ernest Walker, the assistant director of the National Zoological Park. And Mr. Walker told a lot about snakes, about how dangerous the cobras are. A citizen on the sidelines said:

"Those snakes the snake charmers use haven't got any fangs . . . they don't pull them out, they burn them out with hot wires . . . but they grow back and sometimes the snake charmers forget about the fangs coming back and get bitten . . . Sometimes, I'm told, the snake charmers are badly poisoned and die . . ."

The announcer got busy again, reading on his script; the copperhead twitched his tail again, displaying increased indifference. The announcer grew busier; the copperhead grew sleepier. The crowds around the mike grew larger.

Then Father Timothy McCarthy, chaplain of the Ancient Order of Hibernians for the District of Columbia, walked to the mike with an Irish lilt in his voice that was a theme song for St. Patrick's Day itself. Twenty years from the Old Sod, he is, but has been back several times, "and bless it, 'tis the finest spot on earth there."

The spectators quieted down when Father McCarthy said it was all just a legend, St. Patrick, of course, did not drive any snakes out of Ireland. Father McCarthy himself never saw any snakes in Ireland and chances are against St. Patrick having seen any. The driving of the snakes from Ireland is all told by way of illustration. Actually, St. Patrick drove out all that was despicable, the sin that crawled on its belly like a snake.

The crowd grew interested, the announcer grew active, the copperhead grew sleepier. Across the hallway a big turtle flapped in its pool; other turtles flapped in their pools. The slight noise didn't reach the mike because the turtle's cases are glass inclosed and so the Nation did not hear the stirring, to be fooled into thinking that the snakes were stirring, reacting to St. Patrick's Day. It was simply an ordinary, balmy day at the Zoo.

Father McCarthy stepped back from the mike. The announcer took up his script again, the copperhead twitched his tail, and this, after Father McCarthy had told the truth of the thing, is just about all a snake might be expected to do on a day that doesn't actually concern him at all.

Taxing Outside Trucks Urged By Dahlgren Terrace Group

Taxing of trucks from outside the city used in delivery or in connection with selling in the District was urged in a resolution adopted last night by the Dahlgren Terrace Citizens Association. The resolution was recommended by F. J. McDonald, the association's delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Several steps designed to improve transit service were recommended by the association. These included a recommendation that street car passengers be prohibited from standing in the "wells" of the cars, that no standees be permitted in buses and that a "skip-stop" service be adopted by street cars during rush hours.

C. T. Sherman, C. P. Bailey and Carl Burr were named as a nominating committee to recommend a slate of officers to take up affairs of the association with the termination of the terms of present officers.

The association reaffirmed its stand urging that parking be permitted only on the east side of Tenth street between Rhode Island avenue and Evarts street northeast. This action is deemed necessary for protection of school children.

The association voted its support of a bill now before the Senate which would prohibit the "block selling and blind buying" of motion pictures in the District.

Chevy Chase Citizens

The Chevy Chase Citizens Association voted last night to take steps immediately toward formation of a civic conference of citizens associations, home and school associations and women's clubs in the area west and north of Rock Creek Park.

At the same time the association voted to drop from discussion any idea of its withdrawing from the Federation of Citizens Associations. In this connection a resolution was adopted requesting the federation to work more closely with its constituent bodies in determining public sentiment on city-wide questions of policy.

The association backed up its executive committee's stand that the President's Supreme Court proposal should not be debated at an association meeting by members of the Junior Bar Association, as had been proposed.

Miss Bertie Backus, principal of the Alice Deal Junior High School, was mistress of ceremonies for the entertainment fetaures of the meeting. She presented a boys' sextet, a harmonica band of ten boys and a 14-voice girls' chorus. The children were from her school.

Half-Pint Liquor Sales Ban Called 'Ridiculous' by Allen

Commissioner George E. Allen yesterday declared the proposal of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board to ban the sale of whisky in half pint bottles in Washington is "ridiculous."

"I'm in favor of anything the board proposes to do to advance temperance—it has done a swell job so far," declared Allen, "but I think it is almost fantastic to attempt to stop drinking by banning the sale of half pints.

The A. B. C. Board had asked the Commissioners to adopt a resolution supporting its stand against the sale of half-pints because it believed this step would decrease bootlegging and drinking in public places.

"The A. B. C. Board already has strong regulations forbidding bootlegging and illegal public drinking," said Allen. "I don't think the situation can be solved by adopting another regulation. I will support the board if it moves for more stringent enforcement of its present laws, but I think the proposal to outlaw the sale of half pints is ridiculous."

Commissioner Allen, to whom the problem was given, pointed out that before repeal enforcement authorities were confronted with the problem of how to stop persons from drinking illegally from pint bottles. To ban the sale of half pint bottles now, Allen said he believes, would merely increase illicit drinking from pint bottles.

"I'm in favor of the sale of half pints, pints, quarts and gallons," said Allen. "Prohibition taught us we can't stop people from drinking by outlawing the sale of liquor. If, as the A. B. C. Board believes, the regulations governing drinking in the District are being abused, it seems to me that that is an enforcement problem and does not call for the adoption of more regulations."

Mrs. Janssen Is Reinstated As Teacher

Feared Endangering Her Husband's Position; Wrangle Ends.

Mrs. Ruth M. Janssen, whose application for reinstatement in the public school teaching staff became a point of controversy between the Civil Service Commission and the Board of Education, is back on the job.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, informed board members yesterday that Mrs. Janssen, following her reinstatement, was assigned to a grade room in Congress Heights School, and that she reported to work Monday morning.

Mrs. Janssen resigned from that position when the 1933 economy act went into effect. Application of Section 213 (the marriage clause) would jeopardize her husband's civil service position with the Bureau of the Census, she feared.

Subsequently the Civil Service Commission ruled the marriage clause, which forbids the employment of both husband and wife in the Federal Government, would not apply to employes of the District. The Board of Education then opened the way for the reinstatement of teachers who had resigned because of the act. But when Janssen's plans for reinstatement became known the Civil Service Commission charged the school board with "evading" the enforcement of Section 213.

Reappointed as Teacher.

Mrs. Janssen, however, was reappointed to her former job when the school board was assured that her return to work would not affect her husband's position.

"We needed a teacher to fill the position on March 15," Dr. Ballou explained yesterday, "and Mrs. Janssen was the one applicant qualified to take it."

At the request of Maj. Edwin S. Bettelheim, director of plans for the annual Army Day parade scheduled for April 6, the board voted to assign a company of cadets from each high school and one of the cadet bands to the line of march. At the same time all children, whose parents request it, will be excused from classes to view the procession.

The board received Dr. Ballou's report objecting to substituting a "single salary" scale for the present salary system adopted in 1924.

Pay Based on Training.

The "single salary" plan proposed by the Teachers Union would pay teachers according to their years of training, regardless of whether they teach in elementary, junior high, or senior high departments.

"Such a plan contemplates paying teachers for academic training, and does not take into consideration experience or teaching ability," said the superintendent. He described the system now in effect as one that gives "higher pay for higher quality of service."

Representative Sol Bloom, of New York, appeared before the board in behalf of "a constituent" who has applied for a permit to open a wholesale liquor business in the first block of O street northwest. While the business would be within a restricted area, because of the location of the John F. Cook school on P street, Representative Bloom thought the requested permission should be granted because there would be no liquor sold retail on the premises, and "all the deliveries would be made through the alley at the rear of the building there. The board received the Congressman's information for consideration.

Vliet Is Promoted

Andrew M. Vliet, head history teacher at McKinley High School, was promoted to the assistant principalship of that school by the Board of Education yesterday.

Vliet succeeds the late W. C. Myers, whose recent death left the post vacant. The new assistant principal's name was brought to the board through the personnel committee, which had approved the recommendation of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent.

Vliet, an Indianan, has been in the Washington school system since 1922.

King of Jazz Appeals for Symphony

Paul Whiteman and Band Also Join in Concert Presented Here.

Paul Whiteman, assuming the role of campaigner for the National Symphony Orchestra, yesterday called upon jazz enthusiasts and symphony lovers to drop their differences and pull together for music.

And last night Whiteman showed how this was done when his orchestra and the National Symphony appeared together on the Constitution Hall stage and entertained music lovers of both the above species.

In the company of Whiteman's band, the symphony went swinging with Lady Jazz for the indubitable entertainment of a large and uproariously applausive audience. Chaperons being out of date, the propriety of the proceedings was more or less certified by the facetious decorum of Deems Taylor, who delivered what may be called program quips with the grave demeanor of an oracle. Dr. Kindler's musicians had the air of enjoying themselves hugely in the relaxation from discipline, and, in the immortal phrase of somebody or other, "a good time was had by all."

Phillips' Number Clever.

The merriment began with Van Phillips' clever "Thank You, Mr. Bach," in which a theme by Johann Sebastian of that ilk was transferred from the well-tempered Clavichord to the untempered mercies of a swing arrangement. There is real humor in this transmogrification of a classic line into the curlicues of musical slang, and the instrumentation is both adroit and effective. Phillips is to be complimented upon his skill and upon his courtesy to Bach in the title. Not all adapters are so considerate.

Berry's high-temperatured version of the "William Tell" overture continued the fun. No apologies to Rossini are necessary, for that jovial and witty composer would have chuckled at the racy treatment. So, one fancies, would all the composers concerned in Adolph Deutsch's "An Essay on Waltzes," a melange that starts with a Beethoven minuet and brings upon the dance floor ten other writers in three-fourth rhythm.

W. C. Handy's "St. Louis Blues" was apparently arranged by Fred Van Eps for the express purpose of allowing Casper Reardon to demonstrate not only what he learned from Carlos Salzedo but also his own technical tricks on the harp.

Two numbers from the "Scottish Suite" of Adolphe Deutsch brought upon the stage four bagpipes in full regalia. Ferde Grofe's "Tabloid" suite, which satirizes the abbreviated newspaper in three movements called "Run of the News," "Comic Strip" and "Going to Press," is not as well done as his other suites.

Concert Quiets Down.

After this excessively noisy affair, things quieted down for Ed Plumb's arrangement of Arndt's "Nola" with an ornate saxophone solo for Al Gallardo, and the concert came to its end with that inevitable Whiteman item, George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," in which Roy Bargy ran the gamut of the piano keyboard.

Whiteman, appearing as guest at a Raleigh Hotel report luncheon of workers out to raise a $110,000 sustaining fund for the Capital's Symphony, said the time has come for united action.

"And in Washington," he declared, "this means supporting the National Symphony. You've got a good thing started."

Whiteman, one-time king of jazz, who now prefers the title Dean of Modern American Music, reminded his listeners that he started out as a "classicist." He was viola player once wit hthe San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. "I played string quartets, too," he said.

Then, he pointed out, he saw the possibilities in jaz as modern music—and started out on a career of "experiments." He said he's been experimenting ever since.

a meeting in which $00 campaign

Whiteman was guest of honor at workers reported contributions totaling $53,142.

Civil Service Plan Urged For District

Allen Says Residents Face Danger If Federal Proposal Wins.

Declares Loophole Could Keep Them From Jobs in Municipality.

Formation of a municipal civil service commission, patterned after the Federal agency, as a barrier against political pressure in the selection of employes of the District government, was advocated yesterday by Commissioner George E. Allen.

At the same time Allen pointed out that several weeks of study have revealed grave dangers to local residents in the proposal that the District government be placed under the Federal Civil Service.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen earlier in the day announced he was in favor of bringing all of the District's approximately 11,000 employes completely under the Civil Service Commission.

But Allen pointed out that a loophole in the Civil Service law would virtually prevent any resident of the District from obtaining a job in his own municipal government. The Federal Civil Service law, Allen pointed out, would embrace the apportionment regulation in such fashion that a bona fide District citizen of high caliber and with a high examination mark might be shunted aside in favor of a citizen of Vermont.

Wants Jobs for Citizens.

"It is my firm belief," said Allen, "that jobs in the District government should go only to bona fide citizens and taxpayers of the District.

"I think the only solution of the problem is the establishment of a municipal civil service commission, free from political or local influence, which would select employes of the the District government on a merit basis alone."

Although all District employes except policy-directing officers since Allen's appointment have been selected from civil service rolls, the Commissioner pointed out that some of them have been residents of other States. The Commissioners had no alternative but to appoint the nonresident employes when their names appeared at the top of the list certified by the Civil Service Commission, Allen explained.

"It is my belief," Allen declared, "that no one should be given a job in the District government, with the exception of department heads and policy-making officials, who has not been a citizen and taxpayer in Washington for at least three years and who does not claim a residence in the States."

To bring the municipal personnel entirely under the Federal civil service would only aggravate an already bad situation, Allen said.

2 Trinity Students Seriously Injured In Auto Accident

Two young women, students at Trinity College, Brookland, were seriously hurt last night in an automobile collision on the Park road entrance to Rock Creek Park.

They are:

Elizabeth Callahan, 20, of New York, at Emergency Hospital, the exact extent of her injuries not having been determined.

Margaret Bough, 20, of New York, at Garfield Hospital with a compound fracture of the right leg.

Police said the young women were riding in a car operated by James Lee, 23, a student at Georgetown University. Officers last night were trying to locate two other persons said to have been in Lee's car.

The collision was with a car driven, officers said, by Isaiah Brown, 28, colored, of 52 Patterson street northeast. Both Lee and Patterson were treated at Garfield Hospital. Their injuries were not serious.

State Witnesses Testify Blood Not Baldwin's

Colored Chauffeur Also Is Cleared as Trial for Murder Continues.

By the Associated Press.

Huntington, W. Va., March 17.—Two prosecution experts told the Charles Baldwin jury today that four blood-stained exhibits bore blood of the same type and that it was not the type of the 41-year-old defendant.

The State, which accuses Baldwin of killing his 63-year-old mother, Mrs. Juliette B. Enslow, offered in evidence a pillow case from her bed, a towel which was found about her neck, a handkerchief discovered in an air shaft in the basement and a pajama coat identified as the defendant's property.

Karl V. Shanholtzer, chemist in the State police bureau of identification at Charleston, testified the stains were all of the same type, known as "type one."

He said tests made of the blood of Baldwin showed "type two" and the blood of Judge Johnson, colored chauffeur at the Enslow home, was "type four."

Shanholtzer's statements were corroborated by Dr. James B. Beck, formerly with the Charleston General Hospital but now a pathologist at Worcester, Mass.

A packed courtroom was on hand for the latest stage in the case, which began the morning of last October 17, when the wealthy widow of Frank Bliss Enslow was found dead in her mansion. Baldwin, a son by a former marriage, was arrested a week after his mother's death.

TVA Power Sale In Georgia Upheld

In doing so, the tribunal voided an order of the Eastern Tennessee District Court in so far as Georgia was concerned.

The Georgia Power Co. first instituted suit in Georgia, where its petition was denied, and later joined 18 other power companies to file suit in the Eastern Tennessee District Court.

Firemen's Bill For 5-Day Week Given Senate

Measure Allows Time Off for Extra Duty; House Studies Pension.

Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, yesterday introduced in the Senate a bill to give District firemen a 5-day week.

The measure provides that all officers and men in the fire department be given compensatory time off for Saturdays and Sundays, for legal holidays and for any extra duty that may prove necessary in emergencies.

Working hours would be limited to 70 a week for night duty and 50 a week for the day platoon under the terms of the measure. This would continue the present shift of ten hours a day on the day platoon and 14 hours at night.

District officials have estimated that it would cost approximately $1,000,000 to place the fire department on a three-platoon system with eight-hour shifts. Because of this cost, the plan has been rejected by the Commissioners and the Budget Bureau.

No figures were available yesterday on the cost of instituting the five-day week, but District officials estimated it would be less than that of instituting the three-platoon system.

A bill which would permit members of the District police and fire departments to retire voluntarily after 25 years' service with half pay was introduced in the House by Representative Jenckes (Democrat), of Indiana.

Both measures have been referred to the respective District committees in the Senate and House.

Rescuers Fight Snow to Reach Stricken Man

Resort Operator, Awaiting Doctor, Is Trapped in Yellowstone Park.

By the Associated Press.

Gardiner, Mont., March 17 (AP).—Burrowing through huge drifts, snow plows crept over winding mountain roads today to reach a desolate ranger station in Yellowstone Park where Oliver Winlare, stricken resort operator, awaited medical aid.

Park rangers yesterday fought a raging blizzard to reach the station at Canon over a snow-clogged trail.

The 49-year-old resort operator became ill with an undiagnosed malady at Lake Lodge, near the north end of Yellowstone Lake. Doctors were unable to identify the sickness from accounts telephoned to them and it was decided to take Winlare to Livingston. Rangers Frank Anderson and Frank Dallin battled the blizzard for six hours, pulling Winlare on a sled.

Snow plows attacked the drifts over the 32 miles of mountain road between Mammoth and Canon late yesterday, but could make scarcely more than a mile an hour.

"We can't tell how long it will take to get Winlare to Mammoth," said Joseph Joffe, assistant park superintendent. "The storm subsided last night after rangers got him to Canon."

Joffe said Winlare had a "fairly comfortable night" at the Canon station, but was extremely tired from the sled trip through the storm, which Joffe described as "one of the worst of the winter."

London, March 17 (AP).—King George VI and Queen Elizabeth travel northward tomorrow to see their first Grand National Steeplechase as Britain's ruling family. They will be guests of the Earl of Derby at Knowsley Hall, and drive from there to the racecourse at Aintree Friday.

Famous Metropolitan Opera Soprano writes:

"I have been enjoying Luckies for about fourteen years. When I first came to America, I noticed that opera singers here smoke a great deal more than singers abroad. Now I think the reason is that so many American singers have discovered that their voices and throats are safe with a light smoke. That, at least, has been my own experience as a casual smoker. The fact that Luckies are a light smoke gives me a sense of ease about my throat."

Elisabeth Rethberg

An independent survey was made recently among professional men and women—lawyers, doctors, lecturers, scientists, etc. Of those who said they smoke cigarettes, more than 87% stated they personally prefer a light smoke.

Miss Rethberg verifies the wisdom of this preference, and so do other leading artists of the radio, stage, screen and opera. Their voices are their fortunes. That's why so many of them smoke Luckies. You, too, can have the throat protection of Luckies—a light smoke, free of certain harsh irritants removed by the exclusive process "It's Toasted". Luckies are gentle on the throat.

English Queen Pivotal Figure In Screen Play

By Nelson B. Bell.

"FIRE OVER ENGLAND." Alexander Korda's picturization for London Films and release through United Artists of the novel by A. E. W. Mason, adapted to the screen by Clemence Dane and Sergei Nolbandnov, featuring Flora Robson, Laurence Olivier, Vivien Leigh, Leslie Banks, Raymond Massey, Tamara Desni, Morton Selten, Henry Oscar, Lawrence Hanray, Roy Russell, Howard Douglas, Cecil Mainwaring, Herbert Lomas, Donald Calthrop, Charles Carson, Lyn Harding and Robert Rendell. Directed by William K. Howard. Reviewed Wednesday afternoon at RKO-Keith's Theater.

This cumulatively dramatic recital of events in England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth could be identified anywhere as an Alexander Korda production. It betrays that producer's infallible sense of pictoral effect, his obvious respect for the tradition of the country whose historical progress he records in celluloid and his almost uncanny sense of appropriate casting.

The story of "Fire Over England" is slow in getting under way. It deals somewhat laboriously with the tedious business of identifying its characters and establishing their potential parts in the unfolding of a panorama of stirring events that reach their culmination late in the action of a play that achieves its climax with the destruction of the Spanish Armada by a coup devised and engineered by the virgin queen herself.

While the action of the early sequences of the picture is retarded, there is, nevertheless, much in which the student of remote periods of history may engross himself. The atmosphere of the period is accurately and studiously preserved and, if for no other reason than the authenticity of the costuming and settings, the slightly stogid early sequences of the filmed drama are given a solid worth that is seldom attained in American-made camera drama.

Intrigue, Romance and Heroism.

As the movement of the play progresses, there are the divergent elements of intrigue, romance and valiant heroism to assuage any adult taste for deliberate and compelling drama. Queen Elizabeth is surrounded on all sides by traitors seeking her life. There comes to her attention, however, a young man whose father has been burned at the stake by the Spaniards and who seeks an avenue for the outlet of his pent-up passion for revenge. This young man has romantic attachments both in the Spanish court and in the English. His life is not a happy or an easy one. It is he, nevertheless, who manages the ticklish business of the undoing of the Armada. By this heroic feat he wins the royal accolade and the hand of Cynthia, the girl toward whom his heart most ardently leans.

The personal romances interwoven with the major developments of the drama, it may be said, never are allowed to interfere with the orderly progression of the more salient political and international aspects of the figment that has been devised from the novel by A. E. W. Mason by Clemence Dane, eminent British playwright, and Sergei Nolbandov. There is a nice balance here of historical fact and imaginative fiction.

Miss Robson Perfect Queen.

The personnel of the cast hardly could be improved upon. Flora Robson offers an austere and believable interpretation of the role of Queen Elizabeth. While secondary, of course, to her performance, it may be permissible to direct particular attention to the royal splendor of her costumes. Miss Robson looks every inch the Queen. She acts the part with no less conviction. The principal male role, that of the young hero of the piece, is played with fine understanding and complete naturalness by Laurence Olivier, whose romantic attachments are portrayed with no less effectiveness by Vivien Leigh and Tamara Desni, two young women of exceptional personal charm and marked histrionic endowments.

The remainder of the cast is completely British, but still contains many names well and favorably known to American audiences. Foremost among these are Leslie Banks, who assumes the role of the Earl of Leicester; Raymond Massey, who plays King Philip of Spain; Morton Selten, the venerable actor who does so well by the gounty Burleigh and Henry Oscar and Lawrence Hanray, as the Spanish and French ambassadors, respectively.

Cosmopolitan Staff.

As has been characteristic of all of Korda's recent work, the production is an impeccable one, executed on a grandiose scale and photographed with many striking effects. It is odd that so cosmopolitan a corps of productional assistants should have had a part in the making of this picture. The screen play was written by the British Miss Dane and the Russian Mr. Nolbandov; direction was by the American William K. Howard; photography by the Hollywood Chinese cameraman, James Wong Howe; M. Meersen, another Russian, was art director, and the French Rene Hubert designed the costumes. They conspired to turn out an impressive, if slightly diffused, drama of a critical era in English history.

The supplementary offerings are about as usual. An Oswald, the Rabbit, cartoon comedy, "Duck Hunting," and the Pathe Topics form the principal subsidiaries. The Pathe News completes the roster of auxiliaries of a feature that reaches a stirring, but belated, melodramatic climax.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

The 'Roving Studio' From West Coast Is Soon to Appear in Washington to Make Authentic Screen Tests of Those Who Seem to Have Qualifications for Motion Picture Work and Hii, the Tame Beast From "The Good Earth," Will Appear "In Person;" Circus Is Coming to the Capitol;

THAT energetic exploitation department of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's, presided over by the veteran "Bill" Ferguson, is at it again.

Within a comparatively short time there will return to Washington that expert crew who traverse the Nation from time to time in quest of new screen talent. These highly schooled technicians conduct what they are pleased to term a "perambulating motion picture studio." They stop now and again in our principal cities to make screen tests of promising young aspirants for cinematic eminence whose photographs betray any hint of the requirements that Hollywood imposes upon candidate for its favor.

BELL.

This wandering studio is on its way to the National Capital and will test those who are chosen by a specially appointed committee as likely screen material. The details of the plan will be made known at a later date.

It should be pointed out at the outset, however, that this is no fly-by-night enterprise, promoted by easy money racketeers intent only on getting a quick dollar, but a thoroughly legitimate bit of scouting by one of the foremost producing companies in the industry, with an eye single to digging up new screen faces, personalities and names, and costs nothing.

The tests are authentic. Their results are transmitted to the M.-G.-M. studios in Culver City and whatever promise is shown by any of the subjects is given full consideration.

Ann Loring, of Brooklyn, may be cited as one example of an unknown who attained a place in the films through this medium. She was one of the discoveries of this roving caravan of studio technicians, schooled in their craft.

As if this were not enough, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, one also learns by the grapevine route, plans to send Hii, the Chinese water buffalo used in the production of "The Good Earth," on a tour of the country, much as Leo, the Lion, toured under the genial chaperonage of Norman Pyle, field agent of the Ferguson forces.

Hii—and how that should be pronounced, unless it be Hii, I shall never know—will come to Washington in his handsome, truck-mounted cage, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 25, 26 and 27.

This beast, it is said, is a valuable object lesson in something or other, for schools, hospitals, newspaper offices and whatnot and is wholly tame and gentle. He can be led from his cage with impunity, for the benefit of photographers, pet lovers and newsreels, and may be relied upon not to start a riot by smashing a horn through anybody's midriff.

"The Good Earth," for the benefit of those who came in late, is the M-G-M picturization of the novel by Pearl Buck, which has Luise Rainer and Paul Muni as its co-stars in the roles of Olan and Wang Lun. Both of these artists won golden statuettes awarded by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the best acting of their respecitve genders in the year 1936.

Hii, as an actor, will have a considerable tradition to live up to. And never use a preposition to end a sentence with!

It is surprising the number of inquiries from Congressional sources that have come to this desk, since Monday night's opening, as to the merits of "His Excellency," at the Belasco. There seems to be acute interest in this subject, although some of our more prominent solons seem a little reticent in the matter of lending their support to a drama that not only leans to the left, but completely turns the corner and marches off toward the U. S. S. R. with colors streaming. It is a safe bet, for an evening's diversion—whether you agree with it or not—and will harm no one. It doesn't move too swiftly, but when it does there is never any doubt in what direction.

• • • •

The circus is coming to town.

I don't mean the Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey outfit—although that will be coming along later, too—but another one of those indoor carnivals, staged with success at Loew's Capitol Theater, the Fox then, during a recent Christmas season. It will provide the living entertainment at the F street cinemagogue the full week of Friday, March 26, according to announcement made yesterday from the loewcal offices of Loew's, Inc.

Wally Sharples, a circus master of ceremonies of years' experience, will be the ringmaster, in full regalia. Among the acts he will introduce will be Ted Allen, world's champion horseshoe pitcher; the Liazeed Arabian Troupe of acrobats; Lillian St. Leon and her troupe, showing how circus riders are made; Fallenberg's Wonder Bears; The Great Johnson; Paul Jung and his clowns; Woolford's Weenies, frankfurters that are almost human and the only act of its kind in the world, and Capt. Pickard's Seals.

That, however, is said to be only the beginning. There also will be elephants, horses, monkies, dogs and all of the other trimmings of a real circus, such as made memorable the last engagement of this sort on the same stage.

• • • •

I cannot too strongly recommend to those who save their theater-going to the last day of a current engagement, the piano-playing of Leon Navara, with his orchestra at the Earle Theater, closing tonight. Navara, as those who recall him as a former master of ceremonies at the Thirteenth street house will remember, is a concert artist of the first stamp. I am not in full accord with his interpretation of Chopin, but every vaudeville performer seems to think that he has to make everything he does spectacular. Nevertheless, his trick at the keyboard is one of the treats of the season and deserves to be heard.

Guild Sponsors Miss Hepburn In 'Jane Eyre' at National

Katharine Hepburn will appear on the stage of the National Theater next week, beginning Monday night, in Helen Jerome's dramatization of Charlotte Bronte's novel of "Jane Eyre," produced under the aegis of the Theater Guild. This is a long-awaited event in the season's theater and will be made available to Guild subscribers at their regular subscription rates. Miss Hepburn's last appearance on the local stage also was at the National in "The Lake." It will be recalled that it was Helen Jerome who made the admirable stage adapatation of Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice" and that she seems to possess a peculiar facility for this sort of thing. The supporting cast will be led by Dennis Hoey, Tom Powers, Viola Roache, Phillippa Bevans, Marga Ann Deighton, Patricia Peardon, Irving Morrow, Doris Dalton, Teresa Dale, Teresa Guerini, Wilfred Seagram, Boyd Davis, Katharine Stewart, Wallace Widdecombe and Shirley Dale.

At the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater, beginning tomorrow, the filmed star of the screen portion of the bill will be Jessie Matthews, the "dancing divinity" of the British cinema, who will be seen for the first time in Washington in the stellar role of "Heads Over Heels in Love," latest of her Gaumont British vehicles. She plays the part of a carbaret entertainer, whose various accomplishmcnts make her the radio idol of France. The stage bill next week at the Earle will be headlined by Sylvia Manon and Company in "Porcelain Romance."

"Espionage," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer mystery drama with what is described as a "howl," will occupy the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater next week beginning tomorrow, with Edmund Lowe and Madge Evans in the costellar roles. Others in the cast include Ketti Gallian and "Skeets" Gallagher. The story is another of those newspaper things in which a girl pits her prowess against that of a man, as Bette Davis has done, now and again, in association with George Brent. On the stage, the bill will be headed by that most winsome of singing stars, Wini Shaw, who returns to the Capitol for another personal appearance.

At Loew's Columbia Theater next week, beginning tomorrow, the major screen attraction will be Jane Withers in "The Holy Terror." This is the story of a pet of a Naval air base who gets a little out of hand. Jane, in this subject, is supported by Anthony Martin, Leah Ray, Joan Davis, El Brendel and Joe Lewis.

As was to have been expected from so fine a picture and one boasting a tuneful score by Irving Berlin, the Palace bill will be held over for a second week, so that is what has happened to "On the Avenue," the musical production which will begin its second week at the Palace tomorrow. In the cast of this subject are Dick Powell, Madeleine Carroll, Alice Faye, Stepin Fetchit, George Barbier, the Ritz Brothers and many more of the first rank.

"When You're in Love," costarring Grace Moore and Cary Grant, will begin its second downtown week on the screen of the Metropolitan Theater tomorrow, after having enjoyed a successful engagement at the Earle.

The Little Theater next week will bring back "The Informer," starring Victor McLaglen, as the chief feature of its screen bill. This is the subject that won its star Academy award for the best acting of its year.

Another laugh week is announced to begin with the customary Sunday matinee at the Gayety Theater, when James J. Lake will present a new Independent Burlesque attraction, starring Mike Sachs, with Alice Kennedy. The feminine specialists will be headed by the lovely Lillian Dixon.

Britain's Dancing Star Here Again

Although not present in Washington in the flesh, Jessie Matthews, England's triple threat to the American cinema—singer, dancer and actress—will be on view on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater for the week beginning Friday, in her latest Gaumont British starring vehicle, "Head Over Heels in Love." This is promised to be an even more engaging musical production than her last, "It's Love Again," which was good enough to win the unstinted plaudits of American audiences.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, March 18. — Settin' Around (Paramount): As I walked upon this lot today, it occurred to me that here is the only large studio that retains the old Hollywood atmosphere. As soon as I entered the gate I was amid sound stages, whereas every other major studio is now laid out so that entrances and administration buildings are a considerable distance from stages.

• • • •

In keeping with this familiarly old outward appearance, the lot has retained much of the easy camaraderie of yesteryear. Stars wander about in neighborly fashion, hailing each other, hailing workmen, hailing extras. All good fellows well met. The very thought brings a lump to my throat, as I recall the days when there was no sharply drawn line between stars and lesser employes. This industry has grown too factory-like.

• • • •

I dropped in on a "Waikiki Wedding" (stars Bing Crosby) set just in time to watch Shirley Ross being dunked in the studio water tank, which had been built up to represent a dock end. The director was hoping to get the scene right the first take, so Miss Ross would have to be dumped into the cold water only one time—a hope with which she thoroughly concurred.

• • • •

Came the starting order, and Shirley was thrown into the water. She came to the surface dripping like a drowned mouse. But right in the middle of the sequence a workman outside the set let loose a yell which completely ruined the carefully laid plans. The director blew sky high. "Get that man!" he shouted, "Get him; I want to talk to him!" Crosby, staring at the dripping, teeth-chattering Miss Ross, who was almost in tears, added sotto voce, "Yeah, get him! I think Shirley wants to talk to him too!'

• • • •

Eleanor Whitney and Johnny Downs were playing a sentimental scene for "Turn Off the Moon" when I rounded a corner of their set. The scene ended but Eleanore and Johnny, being really in love at the moment (these two are in and out of love constantly) continued their embrace. The director watched them for a moment, then remarked, "That'll be enough, kids. You can finish the scene at home tonight—but I've got all the Will Hays office will allow in the picture."

• • • •

I lunched with Gail Patrick in the studio commissary, where she consumed the better part of a lettuce sandwich, washed down with tea. Maybe it is because of such diet that she looked so trim in slacks and sweater. At any rate, I remarked that she was an eye getter, and Gail laughed. "I had breakfast at the Brown Derby," she told me, "and a nice old lady came to my table and said, 'My dear, you look so much like Gail Patrick. Have you thought of doing anything in pictures?' I told her I had toyed with the idea, but hadn't much ambition along those lines."

• • • •

Bob Burns was having the day off from work and was spending it showing a visiting relative from Arkansas the studio sights. I swear, I think Bob told me his uncle's name was "Fuddy," but that does not sound reasonable. At any rate, Bob and his uncle had covered every corner and nook of the studio, including a visit to all sets and introduction to a dozen stars.

• • • •

Uncle Fuddy seemed entirely unimpressed by the wonders of a picture lot. Meeting the stars apparently awakened less interest in him than meeting the fellow who operates the hamburger stand near the entrance.

"If I were you," Ace advised, "I'd look up this one thing and find out if it's feasible." . . . "I'll look up two things," Benny replied. Contract Bridge

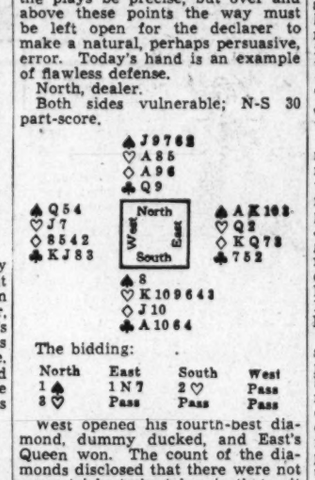
By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Good defense, like good dummy play, involves a great deal more than mechanical perfection. Not only must vital information be transmitted from one defender to the other by means of leads and signal cards; not only must the timing of the plays be precise, but over and above these points the way must be left open for the declarer to make a natural, perhaps persuasive, error. Today's hand is an example of flawless defense.

North, dealer.

Both sides vulnerable; N-S 30 part-score.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	1 N T	2 ♡	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened his fourth-best diamond, dummy ducked, and East's Queen won. The count of the diamonds disclosed that there were not many tricks to be taken in that suit and, in any event, since dummy had no other suit quickly establishable, the diamond situation could wait.

East saw that dummy's club shortness presaged club ruffs and, on the proper assumption that unless West held club tricks and unless they could be preserved from ruffs there would be little or no hope of defeating the contract, he boldly laid down the heart Queen.

Declarer did not naively assume that East's lead of the heart Queen showed the Jack, but he could hardly lose sight of the fact that it might show just that. At any rate, it probably was not a singleton and therefore it could do no harm to win the trick with dummy's Ace. The nine of clubs was the next play; declarer allowed it to ride, West winning with the Jack.

West easily could read his partner's intention to war against club ruffs in the dummy, and his impulse was to lay down the Jack of hearts, further to reduce dummy's ruffing power, but rather than expose the Jack to sure death West decided to give it a chance for its life. Therefore, on the near-certainty that East controlled the spade situation, West led a low spade. East won with the King, and promptly returned his low heart.

Now, declarer was truly on the spot. If East still had the Jack, the play of the King would probably be fatal—dummy's trumps would be reduced either way to one and thus only one club could be ruffed. If, on the other hand, declarer were to finesse at this stage against East's possible Jack, and West were to turn up with that vital card, five tricks would be lost.

It is not to declarer's discredit that he guessed wrong, and went down one trick.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Why Does Girl Refuse to Go to Any College Dances With Young Man She Seems to Like?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a freshman in college and have been going with a high school girl the past 10 months. This girl is very attractive looking and has the highest moral ideals, which I admire in a girl. She doesn't smoke or drink and is not the petting type, but at times I cannot understand her attitude toward me.

* * * *

For instance, several weeks ago I asked her if she planned to invite me to her senior prom, and she told me she was taking another boy, with whom I happen to know she has had only three dates. Not only this, but she refuses to go to any college dances with me. And still, she says she likes my company and wishes me to come and see her.

* * * *

I have tried everything I know to stay in right with her. I have a car and can take her to shows and dancing afterward. I believe she likes my company because if I stay away for a while she telephones to say she is sorry; that she was unjust or unkind, and asks me to come around. My problem is this: Should I keep on going with her, or just drop out of the picture once and for all? Sincerely yours,

W. J. K.

* * * *

What to Believe.

DEAR W. J. K.: There must be something wrong with your dancing or dance-floor technique. From what you say, the girl likes you well enough, but draws the line at going dancing with you. Maybe you're what the younger generation calls "a rotten dancer," and there are few greater social sins (in the younger generation's eyes) than that; maybe you don't know how to wear evening clothes; maybe you're not a good mixer in a group; maybe she thinks you act quiet and "dumb" when out with a crowd; in other words, maybe you show to the very worst advantage on a dance floor.

* * * *

Why don't you ask her straight out why it is she never goes dancing with you? Tell her she will be doing you a real favor in telling the truth. If your dancing is at fault, join an evening dancing class and remedy the lack. If it's your appearance, ask her counsel in improving it. If you have been inclined to be a sort of wet blanket on a party, through dogging one girl's footsteps and glaring jealousy at all other boys who come near her, try to remedy that defect also.

* * * *

Of course, it's possible the girl doesn't entertain a positive liking for you, but uses you in the capacity of "old shoe," more or less. You know, the steady, faithful, dependable, devoted suitor she can always fall back on when temporarily devoid of attractive, exciting and congenial admirers.

My advice is to try to pin the girl down to some honest explanation of her actions in avoiding all dance engagements with you. If she won't be specific, then I think you may conclude she is using you for "a good thing," as they say; and the only way to correct that sort of exploitation is to stop seeing her altogether.

M. H.

Boy-and-Girl Feud.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a small problem I'd like you to help me with. There is a young man who recently came from New York and joined our church. Since then he has become the rage of all the young ladies. However, he doesn't seem to be able to win me. We've gotten into clashes once or twice. I will not permit him to loll around me, which seems to be his weakness. He acts as though he likes me a lot, but due to his unstable disposition in regard to girls I have refused his attentions. Now he seems very peeved and seems to be "trying to get even," as he threatened to do.

* * * *

He takes other girls out for entertainment and brings them to church, which is perfectly grand, but I certainly would appreciate it if he didn't flaunt them in my face in such an annoying way. It is especially aggravating when done in the presence of onlookers. Also, he sometimes tries to attract my attention in what I can only describe as a menacing way. I try to ignore him and act as if I do not know he is present. Then he throws himself right in my path and he knows I can't get around him without seeing him and his latest flame.

* * * *

All this may sound very silly but it's really disgusting. I don't know whether he is trying to make me jealous, or sorry for not accepting his attentions; whether he is trying to get even by making me feel uncomfortable, or whether he is trying to let me know, in some vague way, that he cares for me. I don't know what his idea is, but in any event I wish he'd take his girl friends from under my nose. If I had wanted him I would have accepted his attentions.

Can you give me some suggestions on how to act when I come face to face with this young man and his girl friends? He is very good looking, therefore he can change girl friends any time he choses. Thank you. MAGGIE.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR MAGGIE: I believe you are more upset than you care to admit, over your failure to bring this would-be young Lothario completely to heel. And he is piqued because you refuse to compete for his favor. Each has the other guessing. Neither is playing a very subtle game. If you were completely disinterested in him, you wouldn't care if he had a dozen girls in tow and you wouldn't mind in the least elbowing them and him out of the way in order to get to the nearest exit. You'd probably be absent-mindedly gracious to him and his ladies whenever, wherever and however met.

* * * *

On the other hand, if he no longer cared a hoot for you or your opinion, I'm sure he wouldn't go to such exaggerated lengths to have himself and his antics noticed. But now that the feud has reached such serio-comic proportions, I doubt that romantic mutual love will ever come of it. A woman has to deflate a man's ego in somewhat more subtle ways than you have done if she wishes to humble him while retaining and intensifying his admiration of her. I think it very probable he is trying to "get even" with you for hurting his feelings by your pretended scornful indifference.

* * * *

The only common-sense, well bred, Christian thing to do is to be casually friendly toward the young man. Treat him with nonchalant courtesy. Don't go to elaborate lengths to avoid speaking to him. Don't make a point of looking in another direction when he is in the room. If you come face to face with him, say "hello," or "good evening," or "how are you?" and let it go at that. If he addresses any remarks to you, answer pleasantly and briefly. If you meet his glance, smile or nod, but indifferently. And be civil to his girl friends, as you would be civil to any woman met anywhere. M. H.

Exercise Helps Development of Correct Stance

By Carolyn Abbott.

TO BE "the belle of the ball" you must be able to stand and walk correctly as well as dance well. The old walking lesson of feet pointed straight ahead, even to being a little pigeon-toed, holds good for spring strollers. But standing still is a little different—especially at a party. You must not stand pigeon-toed or balance yourself on one foot, sticking the other one out to trip some passer-by.

"Standing pigeon-toed with shoulders slouched, stomach out and hands just dangling is perhaps the most ungraceful position imaginable, and one of the most difficult faults to contend with in young things who are making their first social appearances," according to John Ward, who makes a business of telling New York debutantes how to stand.

Girls Shy, Awkward.

Ward says, "Young girls are likely to fall into the 'pigeon-toed stance' partly from shyness and partly from adolescent awkwardness." He thinks that a debutante's social future is at stake more on the dance floor, where she is the synosure of the all-important stag line, as well as their mothers, than anywhere else. Her dancing isn't the only thing that is criticized. It's those moments when a girl is simply standing or chatting in a group of friends at an afternoon party.

Tells How to "Dip."

"Stand erect, arms bent, elbows to side. Reach back as far as you can with the right foot, and complete the step with the ball of the right foot resting on the floor. Then back with the left foot and walk the entire length of the room in this backward fashion, balancing your weight almost entirely with the toes of the right and left feet."

Because he thinks it difficult for social neophytes to master a graceful dip in dancing, Mr. Ward has a limbering-up exercise for this:

"Lunge forward with the right foot, then, bending the knees, rise up and down in a bouncing fashion. Alternate with left foot forward. This adds elasticity to the knee muscles and also helps in maintaining balance while dancing."

How to Plan Your Wedding

YOUR WEDDING! What a beautiful memory it will be for you—if you solve the wedding etiquette and budget problems.

The larger part of the expenses fall to the bride and her family. They provide the bridal costume and trousseau. They send the engraved invitations, or announcements, or both.

They see to the music, decorations, all incidental service connected with the ceremony whether it's at home, at church or in a hotel ballroom. They give the wedding breakfast or reception.

The bride gives each of her attendants a gift. Usually she provides their bouquets—though sometimes the groom does this with her help in selecting flowers to harmonize with their dresses.

The groom's obligations? The wedding ring, of course. The bride's bouquet; corsages for her mother and his. The marriage license and minister's fee. Gifts and bountonnieres for his best man and ushers.

Our 40-page booklet, How to Plan Your Wedding, gives full details for formal and informal ceremonies. All about wedding etiquette, costumes, invitations, announcements, menus for breakfasts and receptions.

For 1937—Sculptured or Picturesque

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

WHETHER you want to dramatize your personality or affect a different one, there is plenty of inspiration and versatility in the new spring collections. While the general trend is toward femininity and youthfulness, there are also two noted extremes in the spring fashion picture; the sculptured and simple creation, and the quaintly charming peasant influence, particularly the Dirndl. It is interesting to augment the wardrobe with costumes from both interpretations.

* * * *

The peasant influence has created a vogue for basque blouses and jackets, certain types of boleros, gay sashes, full skirts and colorful embroideries. This is evidenced not only in daytime clothes, but in play and beach costumes, formal evening ensembles, sweaters and house coats. It is a gala innovation in the realm of styling and an excellent manner of bringing variety to the wardrobe. If an entire costume of the peasant trend is not desired, there are variations which smartly combine the modern with the quaint; these are generally becoming.

* * * *

Deviating from the conventional draping, which is an important trend in all spring frocks, are the sculptured lines, inspired by the graceful lines of a Greek statue. Such styling requires ingenuity and a deft manipulation of the fabric; some of the famous French designers have used this idea as a basic plan and combined the old with the new in striking frocks.

Read tomorrow on how capes lend grace and utility to your spring wardrobes.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, March 17.

NOT a theatrical season passes along our frenetic Forties but what turns up at least one little girl who is going to be the first stage lady of tomorrow. Not that it does our unhappy stage much good, for Hollywood immediately snatches her for the canned goods. But we have her to ourselves briefly, anyhow, and Cinderella for early 1937 has now duly arrived in the person of a cute, pinkish blonde little trouper named Katherine Locke.

ALICE HUGHES.

Note the name. Paramount Pictures already have the child under contract. But after five years of stage struggle, of "getting into the theater" the hard way, she finally triumphed, a fortnight ago, in the feminine lead of a little romantic comedy called "Having Wonderful Time," a simple dido laid in the summer resort country in our nearby Catskills.

Next day several of the critics went nicely mad. "The next decade's Helen Hayes," screamed one. "A hat-flinging performance," another. Little Katie, who has been trying for this for years, is trying to take it in stride. She lives, now faintly famous, on old Washington Square South.

"All this means is that I'll now have to work twice as hard," Kate tells me. "Just as long as they'll let me play parts with names. In 1932 my very first part was 'woman with dog,' offstage. In 'Firebird,' with Judith Anderson, I was 'first girl on landing'."

Oh, she'll have parts with names now, the little Locke. But by next fall she'll be a movie actress, full-time, and Broadway will have lost again!

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Two of our most interesting visitors right now are twin sisters, Mrs. Ruth Hoffman Brooks and Miss Helen Hoffman, who hail from St. Paul and who paint. Mrs. Ruth's husband is an engineer stationed in Iraq, and the girls are back after two months in that Arab land, where they painted the portrait of the young King Feisal. They say that they invited him to a New York cocktail party, even though Moslems don't drink, but I told them that after he had been to one or two he'd probably have their heads chopped off!

* * * *

Among the most persistent strikers of the winter have been our artists' models, those girls and boys who pose for the body at the Art Students' League up on Fifty-seventh street. It's darned hard work, and the kids want a straight $1 an hour for their work, instead of the current 50 cents and 75 cents, the latter for the full figure.

* * * *

Now Dave Gould has picked the finest type of 1937 chorus girl, one named Mildred Rehn. She's 5 feet 6, taller than the 1936 model. Dave says the modern chorine must be "tall, patrician, sophisticated and intelligent." My gosh, Dave, is this a chorus gal your're talking about, or a princess of the blood? Where are you going to find enough of those to fill a stage? . . .

* * * *

Just happened on a very tricky gadget that contains a radio, a glass tray-top like a one-man bar, and it also works as an end table. Everything but a folding bed . . . We never run out of Mdivanis, those wild Georgian boys and girls. I eyed another in the Empire Room of the Waldorf 'tother eve, in the person of Mrs. Conan Doyle, jr., who was a Mdivani "princess" before her marriage, and sister of the three boys, two of whom died violent deaths after several marriages.

* * * *

A check-up of the store situation shows me that the pre-Christmas situation is being repeated, that business in the shops is now better than at any time since 1929, that prices are from 5 to 6 per cent higher, and that the demand for better quality merchandise continues. So it looks as though our various Easter parades this year will be both long and fancy!

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

PROBABLY as many superstitons cluster about the question of teething as about any other period of a baby's life. It is still widely believed that teething is the cause of most of a child's illnesses. This is a reflex of the time when the treatment of babies was largely in the hands of the grandmother or nurse, undirected by anything resembling science — catnip and watermelon seed teas, the sugar teat as a pacifier, grandmother chewing the food and putting it into the baby's mouth, all based on the foundation of anything for peace and comfort. An explanation had to be forthcoming for every ill and as teething persists all through childhood, it became customary to blame everything on this process.

Fever, for instance, was almost always blamed on cutting a tooth. I remember being in consultation in a distracted family with a baby who had a fever for ten days. The last consultant, a physician of the old school, found a tooth a little way beneath the gum, and removing his pocket knife, cut an opening for it, which gained him a great reputation for about 24 hours, when it was found that the real cause of the baby's fever was a pyelitis of the kidney.

Teething Not Cause.

Vomiting, diarrhea and convulsions have also been blamed on teething. This simple explanation may be satisfactory, but it leaves the real cause of the trouble untreated.

The fomation and development of the teeth is a part of the natural growth, and there is no change taking place in the body in this process which could make the child sick. Of course it is true that the period of teething coincides with the period of the infectious diseases and of many upsets due to change in the digestive canal and an increase in the variety and amount of food eaten, but no parent should be satisfied with the diagnosis of teething as a cause of any serious trouble in childhood.

Along the same line, you frequently hear mothers say that they know the child's gums hurt because he is always biting on something. If you think it over, you will realize that exactly the opposite is the case and that if the child's gums hurt he won't bite on anything. As a matter of fact, it indicates that the child's gums feel good, and this is a way of wearing the gums down so the teeth can erupt with less distress.

A pacifier may sometimes do good during the teething period, but it is a nervous habit and is likely to grow to undue proportions.

Half-Finger Gloves.

Paris (U.P.).—Gloves with half fingers are being shown at several large houses. These are shown in natural chamois or pigskin for sports wear and in suede for dressier occasions. The glove fingers extend as far as the first joint of the finger and expose brightly painted fingernails. They are not as fantastic as they seem, for with bare fingertips the wearer can easily reach into a coin purse; search a handbag or fit a key into a lock.

Cauliflower Contest Recipes Prove It Is a Versatile Dish

Appetizers and Salads Were Included in the Competition Won by Mrs. James A. Hulfish, of Alexandria.

By Rebekah Blake.

CAULIFLOWER doesn't have to be used as a vegetable course to be included in the menu. As illustrated by the recipes submitted in the Cauliflower contest, it may be fixed with meat or as an appetizer or combined in salad as well as prepared in many ways as a vegetable.

Mrs. James Andrew Hulfish, 616 North Washington street, Alexandria, Va., received the first prize of this contest, $3, for her recipe for Cauliflower in Peppers which makes an attractive dish and an appetizing one.

The second prize, $2, went to Mrs. R. M. Lancaster, 2312 Shannon place southeast, for her recipe for Golden Dreams. The third price, $1, went to Miss Rebecca Merriam, of 5009 Fourteenth street northwest, for her recipe for Cauliflower and Nut Salad and the fourth prize, also $1, was awarded to Mrs. V. M. Green, 1426 Montague street northwest, for her recipe for Molded Cauliflower Salad. The fifth prize, $1, went to Mrs. Eugene Sims for her recipe for Somthered Cauliflower.

Here is Mrs. Hulfish's recipe:

Cauliflower in Peppers.

2 cups cooked cauliflower
1 cup canned tomato soup
¾ cup grated cheese
1 egg
6 green peppers
Buttered crumbs

Add cauliflower cut in small pieces to the soup, add cheese and eggs, slightly beaten. Cut a slice from the stem end of each pepper and remove seeds. Par boil for five minutes in salted water. Drain and fill the peppers with the cauliflower mixture and cover with buttered crumbs. Pre-heat the oven; bake for 12 minutes at 500 degrees fahrenheit.

Mrs. Lancaster's recipe:

Golden Dreams.

3 tablespoons melted butter
1-3 cup flour
¼ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon salt
2 egg yolks, beaten
2-3 cup milk
1 cup cold chopped cauliflower
1 cup crushed corn flakes

Mix dry ingredients and butter, add milk and cook until thick. Add egg, then cheese and cauliflower. When cool, drop in corn flakes, shaping into balls, press flakes in. Fry in deep fat.

Miss Merriam's recipe follows:

Cauliflower and Nut Salad.

1 medium cauliflower
¾ cup coarsely broken salted peanuts
1 cup tomato aspic
1 finely minced green pepper
1 2-inch cube Roquefort cheese
¾ cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Steam the cauliflower 25 minutes, separate into flowerets, chill an hour with half of the salad dressing of mayonnaise, beat with Roquefort and lemon juice. Add peanuts. Heap in center of salad dish, surround with aspic, cut in cubes. Pour remainder of dressing over cauliflower, sprinkle green pepper over all. Place a few sprigs of cress in dish.

The following is Mrs. Green's recipe:

Molded Cauliflower Salad.

1 small cauliflower
Green pepper rings
½ cup cold water
2 tablespoons gelatin
¼ cup mild vinegar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 cups boiling water
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt

Boil the cauliflower, drain and chill. Soak the gelatin in cold water for five minutes and dissolve in hot water. Add vinegar, sugar and salt. Cool,

Nearly half fill individual molds with gelatin mixture and when nearly set, place a cauliflower bud in partly thickened gelatin. When this is set, fill the mold and place a green pepper ring at top of mold. Chill.

Cut off any of the cauliflower stem that sticks above gelatin and turn out on crisp lettuce leaf. Makes 12 molds.

Mrs. Sims' recipe:

Smothered Cauliflower.

When the cauliflower has been separated into small pieces and boiled in salty water until tender, prepare sauce as follows: The quantity of sauce depends on the amount of cauliflower, so make a generous amount of soft cream or butter sauce; add two cups grated sharp yellow cheese and half a cup of pimiento or green peppers.

Put in a buttered baking dish, cover with bacon-wrapped olives and let stay in oven until bacon is well brown. Take out and keep dish covered until ready to serve.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE ARE ALL up in arms when we hear anyone make a slurring remark about kitchens, or kitchen work for that matter. Because kitchens are pleasantly sociable if you give them half a chance. And if you don't believe us, read Dickens or Kathleen Norris for descriptions of gay kitchens.

It's fun to have impromptu parties in the kitchen—after-the-movie snacks . . . Sunday night suppers . . . old-time candy pulls. They're very simple if you do a little thinking ahead. One problem is the mater of places to sit. If the kitchen is big enough, be sure to have at least one rocking chair. And benches that slide under the table between times are useful every day as well as for parties. If you need more table area than you have room for, have a shelf table on hinges along the wall that folds down when not in use.

Have festive ware for kitchen serving, too—a very brilliant pottery tea set and cookie jar to match, or some of that spun aluminum and walnut buffet service ware is very good for kitchen entertaining.

An easy way to make the kitchen look more partified is to take the glass or wood doors off your cupboards, paint the insides as well as the shelves in some very bright color, and then repeat this bright color in oilcloth covers for the tables and pads for chairs.

Another notion we have is that a kitchen is more genial looking when the pots and pans are hanging up where you can see them. Certainly they're handier that way if they're near the stove. Of course, it means keeping them scoured till they shine, but that's not much extra trouble. A rack on the wall along the stove is very convenient and can be decorative—after all, pots and pans have pleasant silhouettes to lend design to a hearty kitchen.

Mme. Saito, Wife of Ambassador of Japan, Is Guest of Honor At Informal Birthday Luncheon Given at the Mayflower Hotel

Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Mrs. John Herrick and Mrs. Fred Essary Entertain With Affair for Twelve; Cake Decorated in Novel Manner.

Mme. Saito, wife of the Ambassador of Japan and one of the popular diplomatic hostesses of the Capital, yesterday was guest of honor at a birthday luncheon—the first ever given for her—at which three of her American friends, Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Mrs. John Herrick, of Alexandria, and Mrs. Fred Essary entertained.

The affair was held at the Mayflower, in one end of the Presidential dining room with 12 in the company. It was an informal party where the order of precedence was not a serious problem in the seating arrangements, but even had it been, the fact that there were three hostesses made it possible to seat the ranking guests beside them without complications.

Th table was decorated with a centerpiece in which calla lilies were used, and Mrs. William E. Borah, one of the guests, brought a large St. Patrick's doll, from whose shamrock pockets were drawn little gifts.

A feature of the luncheon was the bringing on of the birthday cake for the guest of honor. It was decorated with cherry blossoms and birthday greetings in both Japanese and English, delicately inscribed in spun sugar and lighted with 16 candles. As it was placed before her, the orchestra played "Happy Birthday" and Mme. Saito cut it with much ceremony.

Those present in addition to the guest of honor were Mme. Troyanovsky, wife of the Soviet Ambassador; Mme. Sze, wife of the Chinese Ambassador; Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador; Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Borah, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. George Allen and Mme. van Kaathoven.

Harris & Ewing.

Mme. Hirosi Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, left, celebrated her birthday today in the American manner. She is about to cut the red, white and blue cake. Next to her is Mrs. Louis Caldwell and then Mme. Alexander Troyanovsky, wife of the Soviet Ambassador.

McAlpins Visit In Hawaiians On Honeymoon

Olympic Skiing Star Bride of Prominent New York Sportsman.

Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McAlpin, who were married in Sun Valley, Idaho, February 26, now are in Honolulu on their wedding trip. Mrs. McAlpin, the former Mrs. Helen Boughton-Leigh, is a sister of Miss Mary Bendelari, of Washington, and was captain of the American Olympic ski team last summer.

Her marriage to Mr. McAlpin, of New York, was an Olympic romance. They met in Germany during the international competition in which he participated as a member of the American hockey team.

Mrs. McAlpin, since her return last autumn from England, where she had lived for some years, has been residing in New York. She has not been to Washington since coming from abroad, but she and Miss Bendelari were together in Cincinnati last Christmas at a family reunion held there during the holidays. She visited here several years ago on one of her trips from England, when Miss Bendelari and her sister, Miss Olivia Bendelari had a house in Georgetown, and probably will come again to the Capital after her return from her wedding trip.

Mrs. McAlpin for some years held place among ranking women ski stars of the world and has the distinction of having gone higher than any American woman in international skiing. She is a British gold medalist and for four years, as the wife of an Englishman, was a member of the British Olympic team.

She and Mr. McAlpin were married quietly at Sun Valley and sailed March 5 for Honolulu on the Lurline. They had not expected to announce their marriage until after their return from their wedding trip, but because of the prominence of both in the sports world, they were unsuccessful in keeping it secret.

Mrs. Holguin, Daughter Fly Here From Colombia

Mrs. Ricardo Holguin and her daughter, Miss Camila Holguin, have arrived by plane from Bogota, Colombia, to join Mr. Holgium and another daughter, Miss Ines Holguin, who have been passing a month in Washington, at the Shoreham.

THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose was a most thoughtful hostess indeed when she entertained in her apartment at the Shoreham for the Capital newspaper women.

Out on the sun porch there was a card table, heavily laden with cunning favors, all green and very Irish. The hostess, herself in maroon lace, had on the required bit of green, it being a necklace and earrings of priceless jade.

The tea table bearing more cakes and delicacies than one could shake a stick at, was decorated with shamrocks, and vivid green tapers, and green and white carnations were in bouquets about the rooms.

Among the guests—not counting the scribes—were Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, whose necessary bit of green was supplied by the palm tree pin which was acquired on the recent trip to Florida; Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, in gray with a small, black hat; Mrs. William N. Doak, in black with a dainty ruffle of white at the throat; Mrs. Robert Taylor, Mrs. Charles Keith, who is from Mrs. Loose's own Kansas City; Mrs. Matthew Delaney, Mrs. Ridley McLean, another choosing gray for her costume and looking very tanned and rosy after sunning in the South; Mrs. Frederick William Wile, whose black frock had a most unusual neckline of cords.

Tomorrow afternoon the greatest number of dish mops, pots, pans, rolling pins, bread boards and boxes will find their way into Kay Pearson's house, as she is entertaining at a kitchen shower for Ann Parks, whose marriage to Percy Smedley Darlington will take place sometime in June.

Now that the snow is about to take its leave, Mrs. Gordon Suiter has some relief from the clothes problem of her young son, Gordon, which was rapidly becoming rather acute. Gordon, hailing from the sunny West Coast, Los Angeles, to be exact (his father is Washington representative of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce), had seen snow—to be sure—but only up in the mountains. He had never had the thrill of having it fall "right in his yard," as he said. So—when we had our recent coating of white, he was simply delighted and was out in the fluffy stuff the minute he was out of school. Snowball battles, snow forts, to say nothing of sled rides and snow men, occupied his mind and time, and necessitated several trips indoors to change to dry clothing. But the Weather Man intervened in the nick of time, thus saving the day, or rather, the clothes.

Now, for some word of our young men-about-town. Bright and early one morning not so long ago, we were making our way down "Little Wall Street." About half a block ahead we saw a small crowd gathering about two automobiles. When we finally reached the scene and with natural curiosity scrutinized the cars, we found that they had had a slight argument and had locked bumpers. In one of them, a black and chromium roadster, sat Napier Parlato, smiling pleasantly despite the mussed-up fender on his obviously new car.

Caught sight of Michal Budny yesterday morning as he stood conversing with someone. The young gentleman from Poland was bundled in a snappy spring topcoat at the neck of which we spied a woolly scarf of red, blue and yellow plaid.

Ernest Schlatter, attache of the Swiss Legation, really steps out when he goes out for a walk. Passed him as he was starting downtown from his home on California street—a cheery "Hello!"—a tip of his gray fedora and he was gone, striding on down the hill.

St. Patrick's Party Given by Brennans

By Dudley Harmon.

St. Patrick's Day was celebrated yesterday afternoon at the home of the Secretary of the Irish Legation and Mrs. Robert Brennan, who entertained at a cocktail party. Shamrocks sent from Mrs. Brennan's farm in Ireland were worn by the members of the family, and the regulation green predominated in the decorations, even to the sandwiches.

Most of the guests displayed the color somewhere in their costumes. Mme. Per Wijkman, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the Swedish Legation, wore a scarf of this shade with her black crepe frock. Mrs. Brennan and her daughters wore pinned to their frocks the gold ring which, in Ireland, is a sign the wearer can speak Gaelic.

"Everybody who can speak the language wears the ring on St. Patrick's Day in Ireland," said Mrs. Brennan, "as one is supposed to talk Gaelic on this holiday. All the shops and schools are closed, and in the morning the people in Dublin gather to watch a review of the troops. Then in the afternoon there are hurling matches, a very rough game similar to hockey, followed by 'first nights' at the theater and Irish dances."

Mrs. Michael MacWhite, wife of the Minister of the Irish Free State, dropped in for a few moments earlier in the afternoon. The Minister was in Memphis. She wore a black crepe gown with a little close-fitting felt hat of the same shade.

Several members of the State Department were present, including the Economic Adviser and Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mr. and Mrs. John Minter, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bonbright and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Culbertson. Mrs. Culbertson wore a spring print with a wide-brimmed black hat.

Other guests were the Third Secretary of the Canadian Legation and Mrs. Ronald Macdonnell, the Assistant Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Dimitriu, the latter wearing a black crepe frock with a white jabot, and a small black hat; Mr. Harold Horan and many members of the Irish colony in Washington.

"A Miser on Gasoline . . . 18 miles to the Gallon"

Washington, D.C.
February 14, 1937.

Ford Motor Company,
Alexandria, Virginia.

Gentlemen:

My Lincoln-Zephyr is certainly a miser on gasoline. On a recent 400 mile trip, we made eighteen miles to the gallon. The speedometer shows 5,000 miles at the present time, and every single mile has been an economical one.

The car has many features that, to my mind, put it in a class by itself. The handling ease, the wonderful visibility, and the smooth, responsive power of the engine are a few of the things that make the Lincoln-Zephyr a truly fine automobile.

Our Lincoln-Zephyr is used constantly in our business. Many different people drive it. All exclaim enthusiastically about their delight in the handling of it and their pride in a car as modern as the Lincoln-Zephyr.

Very truly yours,
A. C. Aiken

A few reasons why we urge you to see and drive the Lincoln-Zephyr V-12 for 1937:

Smooth-flowing 12-cylinder power . . . with 14 to 18 miles per gallon!

Moslems Cheer Mussolini In Libya Address

Declares Frankly Italy Has Adopted Course of Imperialism.

By the Associated Press.

Tripoli, Libya, Mar. 17.—Thousands of native Moslems and Italian colonists cheered widely today as Premier Benito Mussolini proclaimed Italy's right to empire and his determination to remember the sanctions the League of Nations imposed against Italy's war in Ethiopia.

Paying his first visit in a decade to the Italian colony on the southern shore of the Mediterranean, the premier stated frankly "this trip is imperialistic in the sense which all virile people have always given and always will give the word."

Before delivering his address from a huge pavilion erected on gigantic "lictor rod" pillars—symbol of fascism—Il Duce inaugurated the first trans-Libyan highway, important 1,250-mile road, and had flown over many miles of what he called "completely pacified" Libyan territory.

Guns of the Italian royal fleet punctuated Mussolini's remarks with salvos while he deplored "neuropathic alarmism" in "more or less great" democracies over his visit to Libya.

"We rearm on sea, in the sky and on land because it is our imperious duty in the face of the armaments of others," he shouted. "This neuropathic alarmism, this sowing of suspected dangers, does not enchance the cause of peace because it profoundly disturbs relations between peoples."

(While Il Duce was steaming to Libya at the head of his fleet last week, Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the British admiralty, outlined to Parliament one of the greatest naval building programs in history. He laid particular stress on need for British protection in "narrow seas," which authoritative quarters interpreted as the Mediterranean.)

The premier declared Italy was rearming only to meet the rearmament of others and, above all else, desired peace in which to cope with the "long and difficult" task of developing her new empire.

Shifts Indicated For 3 U. S. Envoys

By the Associated Press.

The American ministers to Finland, Bolivia and the Dominican Republic are slated to be assigned new posts soon in the first of a series of diplomatic personnel shifts.

Edward Albright, Minister to Finland since July, 1933, to be sent to Costa Rica, succeeding Leo R. Sack, resigned.

R. Henry Norweb, Minister to Bolivia since April, 1936, under consideration for promotion.

H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, Minister to the Dominican Republic since August, 1931, slated for new post.

Maritime Strike Legislation Urged

By the Associated Press.

Joseph B. Eastman, former Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation, sent a report to Congress yesterday saying the recent Pacific Coast maritime strike "dramatically illustrated" the lack of any effective procedure for settling maritime labor disputes.

Charles S. Morgan, director of research in Eastman's now-abolished office, drafted the report. It covered labor conditions in the entire transportation industry.

The report said: "Some progress is to be noted in labor relations in the water transportation industry."

(Quoted from the traffic regulations.)

"At any point at which an official "Stop" sign has been erected all vehicles shall come to a complete stop and shall yield to the other vehicles within the intersection or approaching so closely thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard, but said driver having so yielded may proceed and other vehicles approaching the intersection shall yield to the vehicle so proceeding into or across said intersection."

shouldn't have done it. I didn't think at the time that jumping over that puddle was dangerous."

He was warned in the future to get out of his car on the sidewalk side.

"It's safe—and you'll live longer," he was told.

Another instance of careless walking was observed at Thirteenth and F streets northwest. This time it was a woman. Several persons were crossing east on F street against a red light. Motorists were attempting to squeeze and honk their way through the maze of walkers. The green light was showing for southbound traffic.

Between Moving Vehicles.

A few pedestrians attempted to force their way between the moving vehicles. Among them was the woman. She almost made it—but dropped her pocketbook.

Instead of letting it remain on the street and waiting until the lights changed to retrieve it, she stopped, stooped over and tried to pick it up. Her back was turned toward the traffic line.

There was much screeching of brakes as the entire line came to an abrupt halt. Calmly, the woman gathered her purse under her arm and continued on her way. She will not know what she did until she reads of it here.

There are no laws in the District governing pedestrians. Authorities can only plead and warn.

But the pedestrians, observations show, are not alone to blame. Motorists who refuse to grant rights-of-way when turning corners share in the responsibility.

An 18-year-old youth offered the patrol its major example of highway recklessness yesterday.

Driving a high-powered automobile, the youth passed the patrol car on Connecticut avenue near Albemarle street. He was traveling swiftly and weaved in and out among other moving cars.

In a breath-taking chase, the foolhardy youngster outdistanced the patrol car until reaching Connecticut avenue and Newark street. And at Quebec street, the driver "jumped" a traffic signal.

At Newark, however, the youth jammed on his brakes and without a hand signal, swung around in a wide "U" turn. Several other cars were forced to swerve out of his way.

Asked if he was watching his speedometer, the young man said he was.

"How fast do you think you were traveling?" Patton asked.

The speed limit along the greater portion of his route is 22 miles an hour.

To further questions, the driver said he was in a hurry to get to the bank during his lunch hour. After admitting the offense, he was taken to the Eighth Precinct Station, where he deposited collateral to appear in court tomorrow.

SEC Links Hutton's Son to Atlas Case

The Securities and Exchange Commission permitted the name of William E. Hutton 2d, to be linked yesterday with alleged manipulation of Atlas Tack Corporation stock in 1935.

Hutton is a junior partner in the brokerage house of W E. Hutton & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange, and a respondent in the Government's suit to oust his firm on charges of boosting Atlas common from $11 to $30 in a "rigged" market.

Copeland Unit Asks 14 Million For Safe Flying

committee recommended two airports. One, close in, would be for fair weather flying and reserved at all time for scheduled air transport. The auxiliary field, it was stated, would originally be used for private and non-schedule flying. In bad weather, however, airlines could use its unobstructed approaches for blind landings.

Present Program Indicted.

The Senate Committee further indicted the present Government air program in commenting on the air crash that killed Senator Bronson M. Cutting. The crash occurred May 6, 1935, near Macon, Mo.; the Copeland committee was appointed shortly afterwards to determine the explanation of the tragedy.

The crash, the committee found, "was caused by failure of the Government's ground organization to function properly, and by inadequate and deficient airway aids.

"In view of all this," it continued, "we should endeavor to have our country organize all Federal airways so that this distressing accident may in some manner eventuate in the saving of the lives of other persons."

The committee had made an earlier report last June, in which it came to similar conclusions, although the language was less specific.

Would Revolutionize Aid.

The 49-page report, were legislation adopted in line with it, would revolutionize governmental relations with the aviation industry. Among the more sensational proposals:

1. Reorganization of the aviation section of the Commerce Department, to provide for an assistant secretary for air, with a staff personally responsible to him. This suggestion has frequently been made by other agencies.

2. Eventually carry all first class mail by air.

4 Repeal the law, based on the Black Committee's investigation in 1934 of the air mail situation, which limits salaries of personnel in the aviation industry.

5. Mobilization of commercial planes, for one or more days this summer, on the grounds that "in national defense, practice makes perfect."

Reporting on the seventeenth major study of American aviation since 1920, the committee discussed nearly all aspects of the entire industry, present and future. Dirigibles and autogyros were both favored, and additional experiment and use are fully justified, the committee felt. Similarly, attention was called to the role of aviation in national defense.

The suggestion for mobilization of commercial planes during Regular Army maneuvers this summer is the most direct proposal yet made along those lines. Although Army spokesmen admitted the general role of commercial aviation in wartime had been studied by the Air Corps, they were happily surprised to learn that legislation may call for such a move.

The number of planes could not be estimated, although there are about 500 in scheduled commercial use. Were they to be mobilized they would be used for transport work, and carrying messages between headquarters; mobilization would probably come the middle of July, when air-line traffic is at its smallest. How many of the 500 or more planes would be used depends entirely on appropriations by Congress, it was pointed out.

Transfer Not Requested.

The committee, it had been felt, would probably recommend transfer of control of commercial flying to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as ardently suggested by Senator Pat McCarran. Senator Copeland was quoted, however, as saying that the report had been "very much tempered" as a result tion personnel in the Commerce Department. He referred to the resignations of the three highest executives in the Bureau of Air Commerce and reorganization of the Bureau made March 2.

In proposing all first-class mail eventually be carried by plane, the committee suggested air-mail postage rates be immediately reduced. Also in connection with the Postoffice Department the committee said contracts have not allowed reasonable profits after additional safety equipment and increased pay for pilots have been ordered.

Chambrun, I've shot De Chambrun!" She was taken into custody immediately.

Asked if he was hurt, the count replied, "very badly." At Lariboissiere Hospital, where the Count was rushed, it was stated his wound in the thigh was slight. He was transferred later to a private hospital.

Police declared the count, a descendant of the Marquis de LaFayette, said he did not know his assailant.

Born at the French Legation in Washington in 1875, De Chambrun inherited the honorary American citizenship bestowed on descendants of LaFayatte in recognition of his aid to the American Revolution.

The count is a brother-in-law of Countess Clara Longworth de Chambrun, sister of the late Nicholas Longsworth, Speaker of the United States House of Representatives.

De Chambrun has served in the French Diplomatic Corps most of his life, and was stationed twice at Washington. He was first secretary of the Washington Embasys and after the World War came to America on a special mission.

He later held the posts of Ambassador to Turkey, Greece, Austria and Italy. While in the latter post, from which he retired only last year, the count married Princess Murat, whose first husband was a great-grandson of the Bonaparte King of Naples.

Kansan Shade Over His World Record

Hilltop Four Upsets Manhattan in Taking Mile Event in 3:21.3; San Romani Unable to Match Foe After Setting Pace.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 17.—The great Glenn Cunningham, king of the milers, re-asserted his supremacy tonight with a thrilling last-lap sprint that whipped his young Kansas rival, Archie San Romani, and carried him to triumph for the fifth straight year in the classic "Columbian Mile," feature of the K. of C. meet at Madison Square Garden, in the dazzling time of 4 minutes 8.7 seconds.

Sharing honors with the veteran Kansas hoofer was Georgetown's speedy mile relay team, which hung up a new record for the Garden track in capturing its event in 3:21.3. The Hoyas led all the way to clip a full second off the previous mark.

Leroy Green, Vince Healy, George Bogan nad Jim McPoland, running in that order, carried the Blue and Gray to victory over Manhattan and Boston College. McPoland finished a good 5 yards ahead of his nearest competitor.

Cunningham's time was within three-tenths of his own world indoor record of 4:08.4, set in the same event in 1934. The celebrated "iron horse" negotiated the last quarter mile in 59.7 seconds as he mastered his foremost three rivals in the climax meet of the Eastern indoor season.

Romani Sets Pace.

San Romani, only foot-racer to beat Cunningham this season and generally rated the heir-apparent to Glenn's crown, set the pace for 10 of the 11 laps and was unable to match the veteran's closing "kick."

Driving hard down the 40-yard finishing stretch, Cunningham stood off San Romani's last courageous bid to win by a good yard. Luigi Beccali, of Italy, came up swiftly and was a close third, a foot behind San Romani. Venzke ran fourth and last all the way.

The clockers caught Sam Romani in 4:08.9 and Beccali in 4:09 as both reeled off the fastest indoor races of their careers. Venzke was timed in 4:11.1.

All of these performances would have been fast enough to win any previous Columbian mile, an indoor fixture since 1925, with the exception of Cunningham's record feat of 1934 as well as tonight's race.

With San Romani pacing, the intermediate times were 61 seconds for the quarter, 2:05 for the half, and 3:09 for the three-quarters.

Fans Roar Acclaim.

The crowd of 14,000 fans gave Cunningham an ovation as he gained a leg on his third K. of C. mile trophy. His sweep of the event for five years is unprecedented on the New York boards.

Georgetown's relay team, anchored by Jimmy McPoland, a former New York schoolboy star, whipped the favored Manhattan College quartet, I. C. 4-A champions.

Running a front race from the gun, Eddie O'Brien, of Syracuse University, celebrated St. Patrick's nightly capturing the classic "Casey" 600-yard special.

O'Brien beat his Negro rival, Jimmy Herbert, New York University freshman, by three yards, as he registered his second straight victory in the event, thereby retiring the Cardinal Hayes Trophy.

The winner's time of 1:12.8 was the slowest for the Casey 600 since 1931 but O'Brien made his own race and wasn't pressed.

Six runners started in the middle-distance feature, which was marked by rough tactics much of the way. O'Brien, taking the pole at the start, was clear of all interference, but Dick Gill, of Boston College, who finished third, Charley Beetham, of Ohio State, and Jim Elliott, of the Penn A. C., figured in several mixups on the turns.

Beetham, the national A. A. U. 800-meter titleholder, was pocketed at the outset, failed in a belated effort to run around his opposition, and wound up fifth, a stride behind Wesley Wallace, of Fordham.

Coming into the last stretch, 40 yards from the tape, Herbert moved up to O'Brien's shoulder, but the Syracuse star lengthened his stride and won going away.

Lash's Spurt Wins.

The two-mile, as expected, was strictly a battle among the Indiana University trio, with Donald R. Lash, the favorite and record holder, coming through with a last lap spurt to beat his slender teammate, Tommy Deckard, by 25 yards. Dusky Jimmy Smith was 20 yards behind Deckard as the Indiana runners swept the event.

Lash's time of 9 minutes and nine-tenths of a second was a meet record, wiping out the previous mark of 9:14.2 set by Ray Sears, of Butler, in 1935. It was close to Lash's own indoor world mark of 8:58, set at Boston a month ago.

Only the veteran Joe McCluskey, of the New York A. C., gave the Hoosiers any competition, and he faded in the last half mile, finishing fourth, a half lap behind Lash. Bill Morse, of Duke University, set the pace for the first lap and a half, but quickly dropped back and was lapped with a half mile to go, finishing sixth and last.

Princeton, despite a tumble by the second runner, Rosengarten, and consequent loss of a dozen yards, put on a thrilling finish to capture a three-cornered mile relay race. Jack Irwin and Bob Thum, running third and fourth for Princeton, made up the lost ground, carrying Old Nassau's colors to victory over Columbia by three yards, in 3:29.1, with Pennsylvania third.

Dean Heads North; Chicago His Goal

Bradenton, Fla., March 17 (AP).—Jerome "Dizzy" Dean said today he was through with baseball for 1937 at least, had placed his Bradenton home on the market and would head North tomorrow to consider one of several business connections.

The star holdout pitcher of the St. Louis Cardinals reported he might locate in Chicago.

Refusing to sign for less than $50,000 and "convinced" he would not get that amount, Dean said he had written the Cardinals asking them to place him on the voluntary retired list. He said Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis outlined the procedure to him in a telephone conversation.

Center Jump Curtailed in Basketball

Coaches' Recommendation Approved; '3-Second' Regulation Stays.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 17.—The center jump was officially legislated out of basketball today, but the "three-second' rule held its page in the rule book.

The National rules committee approved the recommendation from the Coaches' Association, that the jump at center, a traditional part of the game, be eliminated except at the start of regular and overtime periods, for a year's testing period. The modification, result of a three-year experiment by members of the Pacific Coast conference's Southern division, passed the final test after the Big Ten had voted to give it a one-year trial next year, and the National Coaches' Association voted by a 60-to-9 margin, to recommend adoption.

Move Was Favored.

A questionnaire sent out by the rules body's research committee to college and prep school coaches all over the country, also favored elimination of the jump by a vote of 891-to-658. Oswald Tower, editor of the rules book, said.

The recommended revision of the "three-second" rule, which would have made possible partial return of the "bucket play," failed to get by.

The "bucket play," a powerful offensive weapon before the committee ruled a player could not remain in the free throw area more than three seconds, with or without the ball, found big players camping in that section of the floor. From a familiar position their shooting was highly effective, especially against smaller players.

Vote Against Change.

Tower said the revision was rejected because the questionnaire revealed that 1,024 coaches favored leaving the rule intact, while only 549 voted for a change.

A recommendation by the coaches that team be permitted to decline free throw opportunities, instead taking the ball out of bounds along the side of the floor, was rejected, but ordered placed in next year's questionnaire.

Hockey Loop in Benefit Tilt for Dead Player

New York, March 17 (AP).—Governors of the National Hockey League decided at a special meeting today to hold a benefit game to raise funds for the widow of the late Howie Morenz.

Morenz, center for the Montreal Canadians and one of hockey's greatest players, died suddenly last week. The governors expect the game will net $50,000.

Sets Track Record.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 17 (AP).—W. C. Weant's Miss Premier clipped a full second off the track record for a mile and 70 yards in winning the feature race at Oaklawn today. The 5-year-old daughter of Misstep was clocked in 1:41 flat as she stepped home two lengths in front of Mrs. E. E. Russell's Sun Apollo after setting all the pace. The old mark of 1:42 was made by Lynx Eye two years ago.

Fire Destroys Rock Creek's Golf House

Equipment Worth $20,000 Lost, But Duffers' Bags Escape.

Excited Government workers took the afternoon off yesterday and dashed to Rock Creek Park to search for the remains of their pet golf clubs when news went 'round that the clubhouse had burned down.

Relief flooded numerous faces when it was learned the fire which swept through the club shortly after 8 a. m. was confined chiefly to the "business end" of the establishment and did not destroy their favorite putters and niblicks.

The blaze, which did an estimated damage of about $20,000, was discovered by John Welsh, a caretaker, who summoned firemen. Fanned by a strong wind, the flames swept the two-story frame building for two hours, destroying the club's new golf equipment and golf balls. Streams of water sprayed over the locker rooms by firemen saved the precious mallets of the pay-as-you-go golfers.

Harry Graham, employe at the Rock Creek and East Potomac Golf Courses, said he did not think the fire would interfere with the course being opened as soon as the snow clears away. Firemen said the fire originated near an oil burner and electrical apparatus. The structure was covered by insurance, they said.

Look Out, Holdouts!

Lakeland, Fla., March 17.—Holdout players no longer will be allowed to practice in American League training camps, under orders issued today by League President William Harridge. Harridge issued the order because the Boston Red Sox allowed Dizzy Dean to practice with hem last week at Sarasota.

Bowling News

Two all-time records for the C. & P. Telephone League were set at the Lucky Strike alleys last night as the Central team rolled a 673 game and 1,812 set in winning two games from the Government team.

The high individual game was rolled by Jimmy Smith, who contributed 169 toward the record team game. Paul Jarman, Central, toppled the maples for a high set of 398.

Bertha Greevy scored 133 and 329 for high individual game and set as Bethany won all three from Unity in the Ladies Eastern Star League.

The first-place Mizpah team held its lead by taking two out of three from Mount Pleasant.

Agnes Paxton's 126 was the high game in the Lucky Strike Ladies League as Commerce whitewashed Holmes & Sons.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Finally yielding to public demand, basketball branches of the District WPA and Bureau of Investigation decided yesterday to postpone their court duel in the Post's city tournament from tonight until Monday night when their struggle for the A. A. U. championship will be enacted in the Tech High gymnasium.

Fearful lest the Heurich gym be unable to accommodate the crowd expected, the teams readily agreed on a new scene of conflict. Both J. Edgar Hoover, Investigation chief, and Commissioner George Edgar Allen, WPA chief, were in sympathy with the shift.

Meanwhile, interest runs high in both team camps. Particularly interested in shifting the game was Hoover's F. B. I., which promises a mass attendance of several hundred in its own right. The District Building headquarters of Commissioner Allen is retaliating in like form.

G-Man No. 1, Hoover, a trifle more restrained than Allen in verbal expression, but equally confident in spirit, issued a carefully drawn up statement anent F. B. I.'s hopes and aspirations in the forthcoming fracas.

"The F. B. I.," says Investigation's leader, "never discusses unfinished business. The F. B. I. prefers to do its talking concerning the basketball games after the game is over, with the firm belief that the result of this game will speak for itself."

Officials of the A. A. U. quickly fell into line. In an effort to present a well-rounded program, Chairman Winfree Johnson is negotiating with two crack girls' teams as a preliminary cast. The main game will start at 8:30 p. m.

With both teams bulging with former college and former high school stars, monopolizers of sports page headlines for years, public interest in the Hoover-Allen duel has soared to a new high. Commissioner Allan's unwavering faith in WPA's wizardy has caused a decided upswing in WPA backing, but Investigation still reigns a slight favorite to win.

Chief reason lies in the Sleuths' business-like procession through three opponents. Averaging 57 points a game, Investigation has knocked off Potomac & Electric Power Co, 85-9; Flying Eagles, 48-27, and Rinaldi Tailors, 41-21. WPA's victims were Congress Heights, 53-26; Jewish Community Center, 50-16; Y. M. C. A., 52-53, and George Washington Freshmen, 48-41.

Lanahan, Appleton Hurl Ineffectively

Yield 3 Runs Each; Cohen Finally Halts N. Y.; Lewis Stumbles and Misses Homer; Sington and Mihalic Get 2 Hits Each.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 17.—Their grapefruit league debut was a sour affair for the Nats this afternoon at Tinker Field, where the Giants squirted base hits all over the premises and made away with a 6-0 victory.

But the 3,000 natives in the rickety stands found balm in the defeat of their adopted heroes when the Giants tossed an unadvertised thrill into the proceedings—a genuine, cleverly executed triple play. At the time, the Nats were making a noble bid to reinstate themselves in the ball game after the Giants had taken a 3-0 lead in the second inning. Fred Sington and Jesse Hill had drawn walks from Clyde Castleman, and Cecil Travis was at bat with none out.

Travis lined a fly over the infield and Sington and Hill began galloping around the bases, but Left Fielder Joe Moore charged in, caught the ball on the dead run, threw to Whitehead at second before Sington could return to the bag, and Whitehead's throw to first before Hill could return completed the triple execution.

In the motif of St. Patrick's Day, Manager Bucky Harris paraded a green pitcher—young Dick Lanahan—to the mound, and it was against Lanahan that the Giants collected three runs in the second inning. The veteran Pete Appleton yielded three more in the fourth. Syd Cohen alone was able to check the Giants, who thumped out 11 hits.

The veterans, Castleman and Hal Schumacher, and the rookie, Tom Ferrick, who pitched the last inning, limited the Nats to seven hits, four of which were contributed by Johnny Mihalic and Fred Sington. The closest the Nate came to scoring was in the eighth when Buddy Lewis whacked a line drive against the rightfield fence, the longest blow of the game, and was smilingly conteplating his home run when he stumbled between third and home and was thrown out at the plate.

Both Lanahan and Appleton were plagued by lack of control, but after walking a pair of batters in the second inning, Lanahan made the mistake of easing up on his fellow pitcher, Castleman, and the latter banged a triple to centerfield to score two runs. The first of Dick Bartell's three hits scored the third Giant run of the inning.

The score was 6-0 against Appleton in the fourth, when Danning and Castleman walked and old Pete pitched successive singles to Bartell, Chiozza and Joe Moore.

The lone consolation for Manager Bucky Harris in the performance of his pitchers was the display by Sydney Cohen who held the Giants hitless in his three-inning term. All three of the Giants' hits

Dnieper Gets Up in Final Stride to Win Tropical Park Feature

4-to-1 Shot Survives in Wire Drive

Chancer Is Second and Stocks Third; Finish Thrills Customers.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, March 17.—A real fightin' finish developed out of the St. Patrick's Handicap, mile-and-a-sixteenth feature of the card offered here this afternoon. Three of the five starters came down to the wire heads apart and the two horses that delayed the start 9½ minutes with their fractious antics at the post settled the issue. Mose Goldblatt's Dnieper thrilled the big crowd by getting up in the last stride to defeat R. L. Gerry's Chancer and Willow Brook Farm's Stocks.

Dnieper, well beaten in recent competition, ran the mile and a sixteenth in 1:44 1-5 and returned slightly better than 4 to 1. Brandon Prince, carrying most of the crowd's money, never was a factor under top weight of 116 pounds and finished fourth, beating only Pageboy, a maiden.

The race was a thriller all the way. Chancer, breaking from outside the stalls, busted into a length lead all the way to the first turn. There, Pageboy dashed up to force the pace, and Stocks, attempting to do the same thing, was shut off on the inside. Pageboy had enough upon reaching the far turn. Eddie Arcaro, wearing Goldblatt's all-white silks, still was biding his time astride Dnieper.

Stocks got through when Pageboy faltered and drew up to virtually even terms with Chancer entering the stretch. Dnieper, with Arcaro riding like a demon, loomed on the outside and it was anybody's race in the last sixteenth. Stocks was in close quarters as Dnieper wore down Chancer with a last desperate lunge at the wire. Brandon Prince, the form favorite and the only starter sporting green silks in the bargain, was beaten four lengths for a place in the select circle.

BOUNDING COUNT began to move up around turn, was lucky to get through and closing fast, won in last stride. AMERICAN PRINCE ran into lead on turn, but was weakly ridden all through stretch. ARGOAN had speed for seven furlongs, then tired. He has a choppy way of going. BERRY PATCH ran well. SUN CAMP had more early speed than usual.

Helen Dettweiler Bows After Scoring Upset

Victor Over Hemphill, Is Later Ousted

Didrikson Is Defeated; Patty Berg Advances to the Semifinals.

Aiken, S. C., March 17 (AP).—With the exception of Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, and Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., favorites were removed from the running in Aiken's inaugural Women's Invitation Golf Tournament today.

First and second rounds of match play today saw such performers as Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C.; Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky; Mildred Babe Didrikson, of Beaumont, Tex., the medalist, and Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, ushered to the sidelines in a wave of upsets.

Miss Grace Amory, of New York, who eliminated Miss Miley in the second round, 1 up, and Miss Barbara Bourne, of New York, who put out Miss Didrikson, 5 and 3, were the others to win places in the semifinals tomorrow.

Berg Wins Easily.

Miss Berg went to the penultimate round with a 7-and-5 victory over Mrs. W. Beard, of New York, and Miss Cothran remained in the running by defeating Miss Dettweiler, 3 and 2.

Tomorrow Miss Bourne meets Miss Berg, and Miss Cothran opposes Miss Amory.

Other favorites came through their first round safely. Miss Didrikson won her first-round match easily with a 5-and-3 victory over Mrs. Charlotte S. Stern, of Washington, D. C.

Cox, Strafaci Qualify In Best Ball Tourney

St. Augustine, Fla., March 17 (AP).—Ky Laffoon and Carl Dann, jr., of Orlando, cracked par by 17 strokes over the 36-hole route today to capture medalist honors in the national amateur professional best ball match play golf tournament.

They turned in a 64 in the morning and followed with a 63 over the par 72 layout.

Twenty professionals and their amateur partners qualified for match play starting tomorrow. Twelve invited teams were not required to qualify.

A score of 138, six under par for the distance, was necessary to qualify.

Byron Nelson, Reading, Pa., professional, shot a hole in one on the 170-yard fifth hole. The ace helped him and Bobby Dunkleburger, of Sedgefield, N. C., barely to slip under the wire with rounds of 70-68—138.

Major Camp News

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, La.—Manager Steve O'Neill of the Cleveland Indians announced today he would give Bob Feller, the Tribe's youthful fireball artist, "a real chance to work out" tomorrow in a game with the New Orleans Pelicans.

San Antonio, Tex.—After three days of gloomy weather, the sun appeared today and the St. Louis Browns went through one of the liveliest workouts since they have been in camp here.

Daytona Beach, Fla.—For the Cardinals' fourth spring season game tomorrow Manager Frankie Frisch will send Lon Warneke, Ira Smith and Bill McGee to the mound in the third meeting with the New York Giants.

Clearwater, Fla.—Jimmy Bucher, the reserve infielder who is looking for a regular berth in this year's Brooklyn Dodger line-up, featured the intra-squad training camp game today with one of the longest homers of the grapefruit season so far. He caught one of Luke Hamlin's slants and drove it out of the park.

San Francisco, Calif.—Floyd (Pepi) Young and Lee Handley, former Cincinnati star rookie, are waging a heated battle for the regular second-base position at the Pittsburgh Pirates' training camp.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Manager Joe McCarthy is worried. His world champion New York Yankees are too perfect. He began the weeding out task with his roster today by sending infielder Flash Gordon, who has shown considerable stuff at second base during the training camp season, to the Yankee International League farm at Newark.

Tampa, Fla.—The Cincinnati Reds virtually completed today their routine spring training. From now on they will play exhibition games almost daily.

Sarasota, Fla.—Big Dick Midkiff, right-handed recruit from the Red Sox farm at Rocky Mount, gave Manager Joe Cronin a ray of genuine hope today by curving over a third strike on Fabian Gaffke, with two on, in a six-inning tilt between the Boston Regulars and Yannigans. It was Midkiff's first "crucial moment" and Cronin grinned all over the field. Midkiff twirled for the "Regs" and his side won, 3 to 2.

Right Hand Is Big Bertha Of Boxing; It's Dynamite!

(This is the fourth in a series of articles on How to Box. The writer, who can't box, disclaims all responsibility for cauliflowered ears, mashed noses and other injuries, but gives you some inside information from masters of the game to be used at your own risk.)

By Bill McCormick.

In the fight game the right cross is almost as valuable as the double cross.

The right hand is the Big Bertha of boxing, the dangerous high explosive to be fired only after careful rang-finding and when conditions are perfect.

For instruction in the use of the right, we give you Harvey L. (Heinie) Miller, once a champion and promoter—now secretary to the District Boxing Commission.

MAJ. HARVEY L. MILLER.

Heinie is the gentleman who practically revolutionized all ideas of training college boxers by instructing his Maryland University mitten manipulators how to use their right hands.

In gratitude, and much to their own amazement, the Maryland leather pushers went right out and won the Southern Conference championship the very first year Maj. Miller showed them the right could be used for something else than drawing on the left glove.

"The right-hand punch should always be a counterpunch," cautions Miller. A counterpunch is one thrown either after an opponent has missed or just before the other man's wallop hits the target, which is you, in case you don't remember. It differs from a punch thrown while taking the lead, in that the opponent is—or appears to be—doing the forcing at the time.

260-Pound Punch.

"Before you throw a right, you should always make sure that your opponent is coming toward you—and you should go toward him at the same time," Heinie explains. "If a 130-pound boxer throws a right with all his might and main, that punch is expected to displace a weight of 130 pounds. If, however, your 130 pounds and you opponent's 130 pounds are thrown toward each other at the time of impact, it equals a 260-pound displacement—and somebody bites the dust."

Unlike many, Miller advises his Maryland boxers to throw all their weight behind the jabs, which invariably set up the enemy for knockout wallops. That, however, is just a matter of opinion. Most authorities believe in light jabs, as there is danger to an inexperienced boxer if he misses a hard one and falls into his opponent's firing range.

"If an opponent breaks through your jab, retreat two steps," is what Miller has told his pupils. "Then plant the Dempsey one-two left hook to the body and head, and see what happens."

"By this time, your man should be coming in headlong, unless you have sent him back. If he is coming in, now is the time for action. Anchor your feet, throw another left hook and block out the punch which you may expect in return. Then, and not until then, shoot the fireworks."

The fireworks come in the form of a right hand. The Miller method of throwing this punch is sound, scientific and as safe as can be expected.

Broken Arm.

"Throw the weight from your heels," counsels the cagey mentor of mayhem. "Crook the arm at the elbow, and hold the elbow just as rigid as though it were broken."

If your Miller de luxe right hand lands and your opponent doesn't sit down, you'd better forget all about fighting and become a boxing writer.

The Miller specialty wallop is called a right cross because that's what it is—a crossing of the right. It is similar to a left hook, but the difference in the position of the hands in the fighting pose makes it more correctly called a cross. Technically speaking, there is no such a thing as right hook.

The sideways stance, advocated in our opening lesson, is the proper one to deliver the blow. When Maj. Miller first took over the Maryland team he fell heir to a featherweight, one Tom Birmingham, who was an excellent boxer, but hadn't been able to punch hard enough to knock a plug hat off a Supreme Court judge.

Miller looked him over, discovered a too square stance, moved his right foot around—and produced one of the greatest punchers for his weight in intercollegiate circles.

"I consider a puncher a man who can end a fight with one blow," Miller insists. "Take the case of Bob Walton, for instance."

The Case of Walton.

The case of Walton does bear out the Miller theory. Robert was a mild-mannered little fellow who passed the plate in his church every Sunday. Somebody chased him out for the Maryland boxing squad and Heinie went to work on him. Before many fights, Walton was paired against Virginia's Mortimer Caplin, a thoroughly seasoned boxer—of the old collegiate school.

He was fighting one Jimmy Dwyer for the lightweight championship of the fleet at Manila. Dwyer weighed in 7 pounds over the 130-pound limit. Miller collected a weight forfeit, stuffed the money in his pocket and tipped the scales at only 126.

Miller was down 13 times in the first four rounds. He was hitting Dwyer cleanly, but the punches had little effect on his bigger opponent. His seconds kept counseling him to hit Dwyer in the stomach.

"Hell, I didn't know enough about fighting then to hit anyone in the stomach," the major will tell you today.

Instead of landing on Dwyer's chin, the blow landed smack dab in his midsection, and Jimmy folded up like a punctured accordion. They could have counted a hundred instead of the necessary ten.

Do you still want to learn to box?

Avalon, Calif.—The Chicago Cub recruit scored seven runs in the fifth inning to defeat the regulars, 10 to 6, in the first intraclub contest today.

San Francisco.—Leading from the start, Brown Jade made a show of her rivals today to win the feature race at Tanforan. The time for the six furlongs was 1:13 4-5 on a heavy track.

Hamilton, Bermuda—Dickie Parker, favorite, and Robert Murray, Montreal, reached the finals of the Bermuda Amateur Tennis championships today.

Parker disposed of Walter Senior, of San Francisco, 6—3, 6—2, 6—3. Murray added another mild upset to his record in outlasting Charles Harris, of West Palm Beach, Fla., 6—3, 6—8, 6—4, 6—1.

Mrs. Dorothy Andurus, of New York, and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, won to women's doubles title, defeating Helen Pedersen, Hartford, Conn., and Helen Fulton, Chicago, 5—7, 7—5, 6—4.

Denver.—Four favorites marched into quarter-finals of the National A. A. U. Basketball tournament today, but two of the outstanding quintets had anxious moments. The Hollywood Stars, Kansas City Trails, Oakland Golden States and Bartlesville (Okla.) Oilers advanced.

Kansas City—Ten teams of six-day bicyclists wheeled off tonight for Kansas City's first such race in 25 years. Reggie McNamara, battered veteran of 125 races, was a late entrant.

Philadelphia—With first place in the Eastern division already in their possession, the Philadelphia Ramblers defeated the New Haven Eagles, 4 to 2, tonight in an International-American League ice hockey game.

Chicago, Ill.—St. Patrick's High of Kankakee, Ill., making a great up hill fight all the way, came from behind to defeat Central Catholic, of Fort Wayne, Ind., 26 to 24 tonight in the opening game of the National Catholic Interscholastic Basketball Tournament at Loyola University. De La Salle High, of Chicago, the defending titleholder, had little trouble with St. Ambrose at Davenport, the Iowa State champions, turning back the Davenport team, 32 to 19.

Western Five And St. John's In City Final

Western High and St. John's Prep won the right to meet in the finals of the metropolitan basketball tournament Saturday for the city championship by victories in the semifinals last night at Tech High.

Western routed Mount Rainier High, 31-15. St. John's, Catholic champion, celebrated St. Patrick's Day before 1,500 spectators by defeating Eastern, holder of two victories over the Cadets. The pace-setting role changed five times before St. John's went into a permanent lead as the half closed, 11-8.

St. John's led, 17-12, at the end of the third period, but Russ Speith, with two baskets, drew the Lincoln Parkers to within one point, 19-18, with two minutes to go. Swagart made it 21 for St. John's, but Colton came back with another Eastern basket. With eight seconds to play, St. John's got the jump and had the ball as the gun sounded.

In the first game, Western registered 13 points over Mount Rainier before the Marylanders scored. Western held an 18-4 halftime lead

Arcelli to Meet Loder, Newcomer

Werther Arcelli, former Italian Olympic welterweight champion, will meet a newcomer to District fistic circles, Teddy Loder, of New York, in the feature bout next Monday night at Turner's Arena. They will step eight rounds.

Shanty Hogan, who batted .000 in his two turns at the plate, had a throwing average of 1,000. He nipped the only two Giants who attempted to steal second.

The next generation of Orlando fans will be told about Cecil Travis play on a grounder hit by Mel Ott in the fourth. Travis went back of second base to spear the ball on the hop, back-handed, and threw to second for a force play before he nose-dived into the dirt.

Junior Wrestlers Vie In Tourney Tonight

The annual D. C. A. A. U. junior wrestling championship tournament will get under way tonight at the Y. M. C. A. with preliminary and semi-final bouts scheduled. A field of approximately 40 men is entered, one of the smallest of the last few years. The Washington Boys Club, which has been without the services of a coach since Christmas, failed to enter their usual team. Tonight's bouts start at 8 o'clock.

Old Dominion Kennel Club Elects Officers

Mr. Fred L. Sherry was elected president of the Old Dominion Kennel Club last night at Colonial Village; Mrs. R. C. Birney, vice president; Mrs. Edith Graves, secretary; Mrs. Constance Sherry, recording secretary, and Fielding Huesmann, treasurer.

The club will sponsor a puppy match late this spring. Inquiries should be addressed to secretary of the club, Mrs. Graves, Fairfax, Va. An all-breed show may also be held this year.

Fencers Split Even.

Washington women fencers outshone Washington men last night in a dual meet between the Washington Musketeers and the Baltimore Y. M. H. A. The male musketeers lost, 7 to 2, but the feminine blade-wielders won, 5 to 3.

Baer Match Set.

London, March 17.—Tommy Farr, new British heavyweight champ, will fight Max Baer on April 15 in Harringway Arena, Promoter A. G. Critchley announced today.

This Morning

WITH SHIRLEY POVICH

Orlando, Fla.

That tall, erect-looking fellow in the tell-tale gabardine of the ball player, or former ball player, would certainly be Ed Rommel. Certainly no other big leaguer was ever marked by such an utter lack of hips. And there was no mistaking that thinning blonde thatch or those finely cut features that stamped Ed Rommel as one of the handsomest of big league ball players.

POVICH.

He's an umpire now, idling in Florida until the International League season starts and, very naturally while in these parts, he was drawn to Tinker Field, where the Nats were staging a scrub game. It was the old fire horse in him, I guess. Anyway, there he was, the hero of 100 big league pitching duels of his own, scanning the game pitch by pitch with all the zest of an incurable fan.

The American League's taking care of Ed Rommel. He wasn't getting anywhere as a coach for Connie Mack's Athletics, the team for which he pitched his heart out for small reward in those lean days when the A's were a perennial last in the American League and Rommeleaguer on it. Ed Rommel came mel was the only genuine big along too early to figure in those salad days of 1929-30-31 when the A's were winning pennies.

* * * *

The league's taking care of Rommel as I was saying. He's one of the nine young umpires the American League is grooming for a big league job. Last year they sent the grand old pitcher to the New York-Penn League for his early apprenticeship. This winter, they promoted him to the International. Next season—well, they're figuring on Rommel as a big league arbiter.

* * * *

Even as Walter Johnson wasted his pitching fragrance on ne'er-do-well Washington teams back in those days when only a reinforced cellar kept the Nats in the league, Rommel toiled in vain for the pathetic A's in that span of years from 1920-28 when Connie Mack's teams were the doormats of the league.

* * * *

The tall, spare-ribbed fellow alone was able to rally the collection of bush-leaguers behind him to something of a semblance of a big-league team. With Rommel on the mound, victory came to the A's banner more often than not. Sans Rommel, the A's of that era were horrible set-ups.

* * * *

The guy was positively sensational in 1922. That was the year that the A's won only 56 games over the season. Rommel won 27 of 'em. So——.

He was saying today that times have changed. "How about that kid Feller, with Cleveland?" he was asking. "Pitches a half season, wins a half-dozen ball games, or less, and gets a contract for $10,000. That's more'n I ever got. I asked Connie Mack for a raise in '22 after I win 16 games in my first season, and know what he says?"

No, Ed, what does he say?

* * * *

"Connie says, 'Young man, you better take what I'm offering ya. Don't forget, you've yet to make good in this league.' How's that? The fellow who wins 16 games nowaadys sniffs at anything less'n 15 grand."

* * * *

The most surprised fellow in the world when the Newark Star-Eagle carried an item to the effect that Ed Rommell had been bought by the Athletics at the end of the 1920 season was Ed Rommel.

"I'll never be able to figure that out," he said. "I knew Connie Mack was down in Newark scouting me, but I never figured he'd buy me. The first game he saw me work, I was knocked out of the box in the first inning. The only other game he saw me pitch, I didn't last two innings. That night he bought me. It doesn't make sense."

* * * *

Mebbe not, but they'll never accuse Connie of making a bad buy when he took Rommel. In his first six years with the door-mat A's, Rommell averaged a shade less than 20 victories a season.

It was in the sunset of his pitching career, in 1929, that Rommel finally got into a World Series. Lefty Grove, Rube Walberg and George Earnshaw had come along by then, and Rommel, the sap gone from his arm, was relegated to relief pitching. He hurled one inning and got credit for that game in which the A's scored 10 runs in the eighth inning to beat the Cubs.

* * * *

"They took me out for a pinch-hitter in that inning," said Ed, "but they might as well have let me go to bat. George Burns hit for me and went to bat twice in that merry-go-round—and struck out twice."

The best piece of pitching he ever did see—not excepting that 15-inning opener in Washington in 1923 when Walter Johnson beat him in 15 innings, 1-0, was served up by his old teammate, Howard Ehmke, during that 1929 world series with the Cubs.

* * * *

"Howard was about through then, like I was, but he'd come up with a nice game every few weeks. He was a strange fellow, that Ehmke. Wouldn't pitch until he felt right, and Connie Mack always let him have his own way. A coupla weeks before the series, Mack tells Howard he'd like to have him pitch one of the games, and Ehmke said he'd see about it.

* * * *

"I forget just which game it was in the Cubs park; anyway, all the photographers were taking pictures of Grove and Earnshaw, who were warming up. Down in our bull pen, Ehmke was warming up, too, but they weren't taking any notice of him.

"Well, Connie Mack was just about to hand the lineup to the umpires when Ehmke sort of saunters over and says he thinks he right for today. Connie didn't ask any questions—just scratched out Grove's name in the lineup and put in Ehmke's.

* * * *

"You know what Howard did that day. Struck out 13 and set a new world series record. Never saw such control. He didn't throw anything besides that fast ball of his and a change of pace. He gave 'em the only dipsy-dew. Why, that Hornsby was swinging at his fast ball a half minute after it was in Cochrane's mitt. And Hornsby actually swung at Howard's change of pace before it left his hand."

* * * *

Ed likes umpiring, thinks he'll win his way up to the big leagues after another season in the minors. Never knew before, though, that ball players were such great alibi guys.

"Why, there was a fellow on the Binghamton Club last year—name's Arnovitch, and the Phillies have got him now—who was out by two feet trying to score from third on a short fly. I called him out. It was simple.

"But Arnovitch squawked like a knifed pig. 'He didn't touch me!' he yelled after he got up out of the dust.

"He sure did," I said.

"He dropped the ball!" shouted Arnovitch.

"No, he didn't," I said calmly.

"'Well, then,' said Arnovitch, 'I guess I'm out.'"

Rudy Dusek Tests Barber In Feature

Hank Barber, the handsome Jewish wrestler who will risk his beauty in a drawl with rough Rudy Dusek at Turner's Arena tonight, gave up baseball and turned to the mat—because the diamond game was too rough.

Hank played football, basketball and baseball at Dartmouth. He led the Dartmouth team in hitting for three years. In his senior year he was signed by the Boston Braves.

Hank reported to the Braves' training camp for spring training in 1932. Just before the regular season started, he broke his right arm. After recovering, Barber decided baseball was too rough. Looking around for a nice, soft game, he spotted the wrestling business, and forthwith became a professional grappler.

"Not only is wrestling easier," avers Barber, "but I am making more money on the mat than I could have on the diamond."

Barber, who is just 28, hopes to become the best Jewish wrestler of all times. There have been some good ones, including Abe Coleman, Herbie Freeman, Dr. Freddie Meyer, Harry Fields and Sammy Stein. Just a few weeks ago, Barber came within a grunt of two of downing former Champion Danny O'Mahoney in New York.

Barber's bout against Dusek will be his first main-event battle.

George (Kayo) Koverly, the bad one, will return to the local wars against Veteran Mike Sterlich in a preliminary scheduled for 30 minutes. In other 20-minute time limit contests, Bill Lewis will engage Harry Finklestein and Wee Willie Davis will grope with Jim Coffield.

On the Air Today

Tom McCarthy, whose voice you've been missing at WMAL these last few nights, will present a brand new series of news broadcasts beginning tonight, at 9:15. McCarthy, in case you happen to belong to the minority and have never been a Post "Postilion" addict, has been the voice of The Washington Post in its news summaries for the last year. He succeeded Harris Hull, who for many years presented the late evening news summary at WMAL.

The new series will be titled "Behind the News With the Postilion." It will bring to the microphone a wide variety of personalities in the current headlines. Many times McCarthy will arrange for an interview at a very late moment so that the new series will provide a certain element of suspense and surprise.

Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays will be used for the series. The time is different each of these nights, and I suggest you watch the Timetable on this page for the three different hours until they become established in your mind.

Program schedule conflicts in the evening hours has been responsible for the conclusion of the nightly Postilion news summaries. However, the new McCarthy series holds promise of being a real radio treat. Don't miss them.

A bunch of the boys (and some of the girls, too) whooped it up at the Raleigh yesterday noon in honor of WRC's Timekeeper, Questionmark and other titular responsibilities—Gordon Hittenmark. The Advertising Club of these distinguished precincts was the host. Scattered among the audience were representatives of Mr. Hittenmark's competing radio stations who lustily sang his praises in approved style.

The occasion was the celebration of Mr. Hittenmark's second anniversary as a strong right arm of the N. B. C. announcing staff here. Maj. Brown, Radio Joe Kaufman, Prexy Gridley, of the National Press Club, and other notables paid tribute to the WRC ace. Art Brown, who was present, and Art Godfrey, who was not, each paid his respects to the early morning record-playing common enemy.

Everybody had a swell time, Mr. Hittenmark left flushed with happiness and a score of advertisers and three radio companies received unlimited publicity.

Steel Activity Grows Despite Higher Prices

Pittsburgh Operation Rate Up to 91%, Highest Since 1929.

New York, March 17.—"The momentum attained by the steel industry has scarcely been checked by the recent price advances," says Iron Age today. The review adds: "New buying at the higher prices is not yet in substantial volume, but there have been heavy specifications against first quarter contracts, resulting in larger mill backlogs, which are in almost unprecedented totals, possibly greater than at any time since the World War.

"In an effort to clear their books of the lower priced tonnages taken late in 1936 and in the present quarter, mills are speeding up production by all available means. At Pittsburgh the ingot rate has been pushed up to 91 per cent, the highest since early September, 1929, and there has been a nadvance in the Cleveland-Lorain district from 77 to 81 per cent.

"The Detroit district is at 100 per cent, despite the Chrysler strike, and Wheeling area mills are at 99 per cent. The average for the industry this week is estimated at 89 per cent, or a weekly output of 1,163,838 gross tons, which compares with the all-time weekly average for May, 1929, of 1,193,284 tons, when the industry was operating at 102.01 per cent of its then rated capacity. Present output is above the weekly average for any month in 1929 excepting May."

Short Supplies Drive Wheat 3 Cents Higher

Profit-Taking and Rain Shade Advance After Rise.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 17.—Whirling 3 to 4 cents a bushel higher, world wheat values today made an excited response to advices that suggested acute prospective scarcity of supplies. One disturbing report in particular was that Argentine shippers were buying wheat back from Liverpool merchants, fearing the Argentine government may restrict exports because available stocks in Argentina are running low. Big profit-taking on price upturns, however, together with reports of moisture beneficial to domestic crops in Western areas, served to bring about reactions from the day's top quotations.

At the close, wheat futures in Chicago were ⅞ to 1¾ cents above yesterday's finish; May, $1.38@1.38⅛; July, $1.23⅞@1.24; September, $1.21¾; Corn ⅝ off to ⅝ up; May, $1.09½@⅝; July, $1.05½@⅝; September, $1.00¼@⅝; Oats unchanged to ¼ lower; May, 47⅝@¾, and Rye showing ¼ to ¾ advance, May, $1.09½. Provisions results were unchanged to 17 cents higher.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Rail Issues Lead Advance in Stocks; U. S. Bonds Weak Despite Official Aid.

New York, March 17.—Stocks improved in many sections, particularly among the rails, but Government bonds were weak in spite of official support. Stock trading exceeded 2,000,000 shares for the first time this week. May wheat closed 1 cent higher at 138⅛ cents a bushel.

While stocks were steady to firm in most sections and buoyant in the railroad sector, financial sentiment continued uneasy because of a further sharp break in United States Government bonds. In the early selling some issues fell a full point, but shortly after noon support appeared from the Federal Reserve Bank and the market rallied. It was plain that the authorities had decided that it wouldn't do to trust the market to walk alone, and until some definite policy be adopted and adhered to with respect to Government finance and Federal Reserve Board control policy, the thousands of banks and insurance companies throughout the country which among them hold far more than half the huge Federal debt are bound to be anxious.

Dizzy Finance.

The more the financial community studies the remarks made yesterday by Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board the more confused it is, because the reaction of politicians, as was to be expected, was to oppose the sound suggestions of Mr. Eccles. Clearly the authorities fear an inflationary spree, and just as clearly they are not only hazy themselves on means to prevent it but they are uncovering the fact that no political authority is likely to do the right thing at the right time.

When even the less unsound members of the New Deal monetary control insist on the virtues of an abundance of cheap money at a time when business is growing lively and continue to work for a depressed curreney, little can be expected from the other portion. Meanwhile the markets feel that inflation is bound to come, but that in bungling attempts to stop it or to control it a period of uncertain speculative markets will be created.

Alice In Wonderland.

Were it not such a serious matter for so many people—for the whole country, in fact—the Government bond market situation would not be without its ludicrous aspects. Wall Street has long been blamed for overtaking securities to get up the price, for washing sales, for "support" buying and the like, but that is exactly what the Government has done with its bonds. Then, to cap the climax, after the bulk of the borrowing was done, the Federal Reserve Board turned ever so slightly the screws on the money market through the increased bank-reserve requirements.

The response was slow in coming, but finally it has been a mild recession in Government bonds; but once started the ball is hard to stop and the lower prices fell the more urgent became the desire of bank investors to sell their holdings, so that now a near-panic has been created. To prevent a really disastrous fall in Government bonds, the great advocates of reduction in excess bank reserves, i.e., firmer money, have been obliged to charge madly in two directions at the same time. Chairman Eccles cut excess reserves day before yesterday, orated for cheap money yesterday and today he poured more funds into the money market through the purchase of Government bonds by the Federal Reserve Banks.

Bankhead Economics.

"There's a short and simple word," says the Speaker of the House, "that folks don't like—t-a-x." It scarcely has occurred to Congressmen that another short and simple word equally disliked is d-e-b-t."

Boardroom Sweepings.

Cities Service opened on the Curb with 23,500 shares at 5, a price not seen since early in the year. The company is said to have reduced its volume of bank loans and to be making good progress. The approval given yesterday to the settlement of a stockholder's suit is a bar to future similar suits and clears the way for extensive refunding of early debt maturities later in the year. A favorable annual report is expected next month. . . . Tips have been going round on New York Central and a good come on was the runup in the stock this morning to a new top at 55, a gain of 2⅜ points. . . . Gendarmes in Paris fired on rioters and the franc went down. As some see it, the dollar will never fall on anything of the sort in this country, for the police aren't going to take any such chances. As Gov. Murphy of Michigan so aptly put it: the authorities sympathize fully with the summary action by employes, but not by law enforcement officers, to correct conditions under the "competitive system."

Cotton Belt.

It is understood from good authority that Cotton Belt's management is contesting the reorganization plan filed with the I. C. C. by Chase National Bank and Mississippi Valley Trust Co. on two major points. The debtors' plan would place fixed charges at $1,700,000 annually instead of at $1,000,000 as provided in the management plan. Also under a plan submitted by banks the fund for additions and betterments is set at $500,000 instead of $1,000,000 which the management wished to reserve.

Lead Drops Again; New Price 7¼ Cents

New York, March 17 (AP).—Leading producers today decreased the price of domestic lead by .25 of a cent to 7.25 cents a pound at New York and 7.10 cents at East St. Louis, the record drop in two days. The mark down followed a similar slip in the London Metal Exchange, where lead futures, electrolytic copper and spot zinc were also off moderately. On the other hand the London price for spot tin and tin futures mounted a bit.

Last year Tropical Radio handled 55,859,835 words of telegraph business and 3,798 radiotelephone calls, a substantial increase over 1935.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 17.—With sentiment more cheerful and business larger, prices in the stock exchange closed steady today. Transatlantics and industrials were irregular, rubber shares, together with other commodity issues, moved higher, and gilt-edged securities improved. The foreign bond section was quiet. Oils and rails sold higher.

Paris.—The bourse closed with a generally heavy tone, and international issues were mixed. Rentes ended with declines of 40 to 170 centimes. Bank of France lost 325 francs, while Royal Dutch gained 8 francs.

Liverpool.—Wheat futures closed at new highs for the year, 2¼d@3¼d above Tuesday. Improved middling demand from the United Kingdom and rumors that the Argentine government may restrict exports contributed to the upward movement. Rising world commodity prices and a favorable statistical outlook pushed cotton closing 8 to 15 points up. Profit-taking on the advance caused slight reactions.
